CIVILIZATION.

The old Hindoo saw in his dream the human race led out to its various fortunes. First men were in chains, which went back to an iron hand. Then he saw them led by threads from the brain, which went upward to an unseen hand. The first was despotism, iron and ruling by force. The last was civilization, ruling by ideas.—Wendell Phillips.

A RACE WITH FIRE CARS A Story of the Civil War By EDWIN C. TRASK Copyright, 1980, by American Press

When one morning fust before sur when doe morning just before sun-rise we swept down on Turnerville, taking the place by surprise, we found three locomotives and twenty freight cars standing in the railrout and A train was made up, local d with troops, and I, having been a locomotive engineer, was put in the cab. Before starting the sceneral said to me.

"Sergeant, the success of this expedition depends upon you. Colonel Parker is in command, but has nothing to do with running the train. That's in your hands. As soon as the Confederates know we're here they'll send a force to cut us off. But they'll need the bridge at B., and I want you to force to cut us off. But they'll need the bridge at B., and I want you to get these men there before daylight in the morning to burn it. But you must keep a sharp lookout for sangs. The citizens on the line you will pass over are all bostile, and they'll strain every nerve to wweek your train. Remember, not only the lives of the men in these cars, but the safety of the whole command depends upon you."

The first ten miles we did by daylight. Then it graw dark, and I had nothing to see by but the lantern, which lit the track dimly. My head was thrust far out the cab window, and my hand was on the throttle. Twice I stopped her within a few feet of a the wedged in between a rail and the ties, and once I bumped a tree that had been felled across the track, having not quite stopped before reaching it. On an elevation I struck a junction and a lot of people standing about staring at us as we passed. I didn't like their looks. But the telegraph wifes had been cut, and I didn't see how they could send word ahead There were half a dozen freight cars on a sidetrack, but no locomotive.

Soon after leaving the junction I shut off steam and let her roll down the long declivity. I was nearly at the foot on a short upward grade when I had a break—the engine was only fit for a junk heap—and spent half an hour at a standatill while I patched it. As I remounted the cab Corporal Bot Jenkins, who was acting as freman.

As I remounted the cab Corporal Bot Jenkins, who was acting as fireman pointed up the hill with a look of bor ror. I saw a bright light, and a mo-ment later a short string of freight cars shot from out a cut. I knew at once what it meant. The citizens at the junction had started the cars 1 h once what it meant. The citizens at the junction had sarried the cars I had seen on the sidetrack, first having settlem afte, with the hope that they would smaah us on catching us and if there was anything left of our train burn it. I jumped into the cab and pulled the throttle.

The grade behind us wasn't leas that 30 degrees, and the fire train was coming like lightning. I had a few train lengths to go on nearly a level, then a straightaway track on a slight decline. The fire train was coming at rate of a mile in fort; dev seconds, and the best my old whetzer could do was mile in two minutes. If I couldn'thaul away far enough before the can behind reached a place where the would lose momentum they would re-

Then began the race of my life Then began the race of my first could have stopped, let the men on the cars and permitted the snigst but the bridge worden't be burned our force at Turnerville would be off. I remembered the pressure of

off. I remembered the pressure of the hand the general had given me, and tightly grasped the throttle, resolvation get away from those fire cars aget wrecked.

I had my eyes front, while flob Jenkins kept me posted on the fire cars "They're gaining on us mighty fast." Only a mile away!" "They'll cated us sure!" "They're coming like a streak of lightning!" These were the unassuring words Bob gave me while my locomorive puffed and sputtered and dragged along at what seemed to no a small's pace.

Then suddenly turning a curve saw a light ahead. Great heaven Were we to have fire both in frot and behind us? Running on a straigh and behind us? Running on a straight track, I saw mees kindling a same bridge. They had got the tire wen going, but I didn't believe they had burned the stringers shficiently to let us down. At any rate, I determined to risk it. Lawing on full speed; couldn't put on hay more—I dushed into the flames. My locometite cross couldn't put on any more—I dushed into the fames. My locomotive crossed anfely, and I was congrainating myself that the train was all over when I felt a shock. We went a short distance and stopped.

The bridge had gone down under the last two cars. Several men were bad by injured, but no one killed. All were got out before the fire cars plunged in on the wreck and stopped there to mingle their burning with that of the other material.

The men of the last two cars got into those cars that had crossed, carrying the wounded. I mounted my engine and we streamed on for the rest of the injult, reaching the bridge at B. just before dawn. My work was done. I leaned out of the cab window watching the men carry the wood and performent and distribute them along the structure. Then suddenly there was a flash, and from one end to the other all was a flashed. I move looked at destruction before with such comfort and delight.

When I not beek to camp I got a warm greaters it has not long before the same land them the structure is not seen to care I do a several and the same and the Lincoln's Fees.

As a rule. Abraham Lincoln's feeswere less than those of other lawyers of his circuit. Justice Daris once remonstrated with him and insisted that he was doing a grave injustice to his associates at the bar by charging so little for his services. From 1850 to 1800 his income varied from $2,000 to $3,000, and even when he was recognized as one of the ablest inwyers of the state his fee book frequently shows charges of $3, $5 and $1 for advice, at though he never went into court for less than $10. During that period he was at the height of his power and popularity, and lawyers of less standing and talent charged several times those amounts.—"The True Abraham Lincoln."
