PIRST SUMMER COURSE.

the murder of pretty Jane Adams on the million dellar pler last February. today depended on Seyler's own story on the stand when the reast was re-sumed. His account of the fatal night in the storm, and of the events alight in the storm, and of the raini night in the storm, and of the centur at the pier's sursy-dashed and, will decide his fate.

Profiting by yesterday's experience, a great crowd flooked to the little courthouse early this morning for the opportunity to hear the trial which is being conducted with record-breaking expedition. Husdaydes came from Atlantic City and there was the same gathering of vehicles, horses and motor, from the country found-about as on the first day.

The accussed man estered court with an air of nonchalance. This stitlude of bravado which he has maintained much of the time since his arrest was not broken down by the testimony given reservable by physiciahs who swore that the blow on Jane Adam's forehead caused death, and was made before her body entered the water.

was made before her body entered the water.

Seyler began his desperate fight handicapped, according to the prosecution, by several varying statements. To the records of the case there was yesterday admitted a statement made by Seyler at Petersburg. Va., where he was arrosted with his younger brother, Orvis, in which the accused man dealed having left his home on the evening of Pourgary 4, the night of the tragedy, and said he went to Virginia to find work.
