THE SOUTH IN THE IMPENDING.

The South particularly has no faith in the imperialistic centralization of the "New Nationalism." The rights of the State is not a mere political shibboleth to the Southerner, it is a sentiment, an ideal. To him the unit of patriotism is still the State.

He comes by this honestly and naturally. The unit of antebellum life was the plantation, the colony, the State.

They fought the Indians and the mother country as independent communities, and as such they came into the union.

Their people were homogeneous, immigration was slight, traditions, circumstances, education — everything tended to intensify State and local patriotism. This sentiment still dominates. Love of union and loyalty to it is probably greater today in the South than it ever was, but no Southerner can conceive of his State becoming a mere satrapy for Federal exploitation and control.

"The support of the State governments in all their rights," says Thomas Jefferson, "is the surest bulwark against anti-Republican tendencies." And even Alexander Hamilton indorses this:

"The destruction of the state would be at once a political suicide. Can the national government be guilty of this madness?"

The millions of foreigners who no State pride who have become absorbed in the Northern and Western communities, and the very drift of population from new to newer States in the West, have probably weakened State patriotism in the North, so that he new theories of Federal aggression are less offensive to them; but, right or wrong, the Southern States still believe that the Constitution is a covenant between States and that it means what it says, and that they have certain rights which even Roosevelt must respect. And it may well happen that in the impending conflict between radicals and conservatives the Southern patriot will hold the balance of power and exercise it for the preservation of laws and institutions which after all have stood the test of a century pretty well.—Exchange.

Keeping Boys on the Farm

... (from the Washington Post.)

There is a real battle in the corn belt ... from the "Texan" boys' corn clubs, to encourage better farming in the corn belt ... to counteract the allurements of the city that draw so disastrously and so mercilessly from the bucolic population.

The Houston Post says that there are hundreds of boys in Texas who, in comparative struggle for rich prizes offered, will grow 100 bushels of corn to the acre this season. This sort of thing will wed the lad to the farm, and ultimately it will wed the American farm population to the soil as the French peasant is to his patch. If that condition prevailed now, our agricultural products would be increased in quantity more than three fold.

These boy clubs give the lad interest in the farm. In the hope of gaining the prize he seeks the most virile and the most productive seed and strives to give his patch the most intelligent and diligent tillage. He thus becomes the inveterate enemy of weeds. He scrupulously reads the agricultural press and tries to find the most valuable suggestions. He reports the scheme he calculated, he

(Robt. R. H.)
(With apologies to Henry W. Longfellow.)
As unto the bow the cord is,
So unto the bonds is Butler.
Tho' they bend him, they obey him,
Tho' he leads them, yet they follow,
Useless, each without the other,
Thus did speak the Carpet Baggers,
He has lead them, he has pushed them;
He has tried the legislature;
Tried for years, and tried so faithfully,
Tried to sell them, somewhere, elsewhere,
Even unto Rhode Island,
But as yet with no success.
Now he comes, the would be Mosess,
Back to Carolina's shore;
Makes the graters think he help them,
Tell's them he'll again elect them;
Makes the nigger believe also,
That he'll franchise him once more,
Thus did speak he as of yore.

Western insurgents are said to be annoying the Coolidge with repeated inquiries as to his part in the making of the New York Republican platform. They want him to say frankly whether he aims primarily at a lower tariff or a higher Roosevelt.—Dallas News.

Wellman's Undertaking

A feat which is successfully accomplished will cast into the shade all previous victories in the air has been bravely and well begun by Walter Wellman, Melvin Vaniman, F. Murray Simon, J. K. Irwin, Albert Louis Loud and John Aubert in the dirigible balloon America. If they succeed in reaching the French or Irish coast their feat will be historic. If they are driven to take refuge on Nova Scotia or Newfoundland, or to try to beat their way to New Jersey, they will still have to their credit a gallant attempt and a memorable achievement.

Marshall Assassinated

Henderson, Ky., Oct. 18.—While bringing a prisoner from Grayson county, Town Marshal John T. Skags of Clarkton, Ky., was assassinated in Central Park last night and his prisoner liberated.

Skags arrested Chester Fontress, a young white man charged with stealing a horse and buggy and eloping with a sixteen-year-old girl, brought to Henderson and was on his way to jail through the park when assassins hidden in the bushes shot him twice in the chest and made their escape with Fontress.
