GLORIOUS WOMEN.

Innumerable shafts arise throughout the South testifying to the reverence that is given to the Confederate soldier and sailor.

There are numerous sculptures of bronze or marble to inform the careless wayfarer that his attention honors some particular hero.

There are some museums of the Confederacy, repositories of momentous and soon there will be a Battle Abney in Richmond.

No fault is to be found with any of these evidences of appreciation for the men who fought most gallantly for the cause that failed.

But why not something for the women?

Sensible efforts have been made from time to time to arouse interest in the history of the women who performed their duty in the home nothing material has eventuated.

That is not right.

The great heroine of the South, was in her own way. In them was a heroism that defies comparison. Wives, mothers, daughters, they gave more than their own lives, they sacrificed their lives for the men and the country.

UNFAIR SYSTEM OF TAXATION

There is food for serious thought in the assertion of the state treasurer that if taxable property was given in at even two-thirds value there would not be a county in the state but what would be self supporting. No doubt this is a fair estimate. And to bring the application closer home, it is also true that if property in the city was given in at anything like its true value, there would be ample funds not only to operate the city, but to provide for the improvements being agitated, and so badly needed. The outrageously low valuation placed on valuable uptown property must be corrected if we may hope to arrive at a fair system of taxation, and if we hope to share the advantages which should accrue from equitably fixed assessments. The fellow who owns the small piece of property comes far nearer paying his pro rata of taxation than the owner of valuable uptown real estate. This fact is so well known as to need no support in comparative figures.

So that it is true that the inauguration of a fair system of tax-assessment would benefit all counties, and make them self sustaining. It is equally true that the principle carried into the cities would eliminate many of the financial barriers confronting municipal administrations.

WITH EXCHANGES

Or it may be that some of the Republicans do not love ship subsidy less, but they love 1912 more.—In-
