TOMORROW'S PRIMARY.

A second primary for the nomination of a Recorder for Washington, Chocowinity and Long Acre Townships will be held tomorrow at the usual voting places. Under the primary law only the two candidates who received the highest vote in the recent primary can be voted for tomorrow, Messrs. W. D. Grimes and W. B. Windley having received the largest vote, they will be the only candidates before the people, therefore the one who receives the highest vote tomorrow will be declared the nominee.

COGITATIONS.

By EDWIN L. BARKER. To knock a competitor is to advertise his strength.

Salesmanship is the science of placing two articles where there was only one before. And advertising directs salesmen to the place.

A poor ad can use just as much space as a good one. Before contracting for space, contract for an ad writer who can fill the space full up.

The thing we read about today is the thing we buy tomorrow. Printers' ink is mightier than a standing army.

We remember what we smile over. Put a smile into your advertisement and have it remembered.

Price has its place, but it never takes the place of quality. Better be "just out" than force "something just as good." The one loses a sale, but the other loses a customer.

When some business men cease to regard advertising as "tribute" and a worthless necessity, then will they put more thought into their ads, and so get more out of them.

Advertising is a persistent salesman. Kick him out at the front door, and he blows in at the back.

The sales department of a company is only as strong as its local dealers, and the backing it gives them.

To push a trade-mark on other than quality goods is business suicide. Instead of consumers going to the markets advertising brings the markets to consumers.

An advertiser whose advertisements do not make good is not long an advertiser.

Few people know just what they want. The business of advertising is to help them make up their minds.

Just as Good in Print. Every good selling argument that was ever developed in personal salesmanship can be utilized with equal value in advertisement writing.—The Mahlin Messenger.

Treat advertising fairly, and don't try to prove to yourself that the business it brings you should be credited to something else. There was a man up in Vermont who attained the great age of one hundred and ten.

When asked by a reporter just what he attributed his longevity to, he replied, "I ain't exactly made up my mind yet. There's two or three patent medicine fellers dickerin' with me."

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I wish to announce to the public that I have taken a special course in the treatment of all diseases for the scalp. This course was taken three years ago in New Haven, Conn. I have now completed my studies and am making a specialty of stopping falling out hair, restoring hair on bald heads. I also treat all scalp diseases and show you how stunted hair can be made to grow. I teach you how to hold your hair, how to comb it and for what length of time. This is no fake. I am known by the best people of this city, both white and colored, being raised here from a child. I am known as Laura Bonner before my marriage. Anyone wishing me to treat their scalp diseases I will be pleased to do so. I will call at your home. I treat your scalp in any season of the year. I again announce to the public that I have 30-years experience in dress making. On account of illness I had to stop sewing a few years ago. I am now able to resume my sewing. Anyone wishing to call on me I will be pleased to serve them. I make dresses any style—tailored suits of every kind. I wish also to announce that I also do manicuring. In this art I shall be glad to serve the ladies. MRS. LAURA A. MOURNING (Colored.) 213 East Fifth street, Washington, N. C.

Farmers' Educational and Co-Operative Union of America

Matters of Special Moment to the Progressive Agriculturist

The too-early farmer is a bird. Individual excellence is better than a lengthy pedigree.

Give more intensive attention to your extensive intentions. Ever see the man who works like a bee every place but at home?

Most of our politicians have the courage of other people's convictions. Many a man falls to reach the top because every time he stops to rest he falls asleep.

More of us will make fewer mistakes if we care more for facts and less for opinions.

Those who denounce money as a curse are always anxious to have the curse come home to roost.

Going through debt is like going through a tunnel—a man feels uncomfortable all the time he is in it.

Doing the work that is enjoyed is never a drudgery and most people enjoy the work which makes a profit.

Many a farmer's wife has seen her silk dress trickle from the neck of a whiskey bottle down her husband's throat.

He who farms just a little better than he did last year is on the way toward the perfect way of doing things on the farm.

The man who neither borrows nor lends may be following the best policy, but he is not the best liked in the neighborhood.

The farmer should make use of his porches and easy chairs on rainy days. There is no reason why he should not enjoy some of these pleasures.

The world needs reforming in many directions; but the surest way to make it better is for every man to commence with himself and in the sphere of his own calling.

SECURING THE BEST RESULTS. Co-Operation is Secret of More Convenience, Better Treatment and Increased Profits.

To secure the best results, producers as well as those in other lines of business, must organize and co-operate. Along this line the Drovers' Journal says:

That one word spells a great deal for the farmer, in it lies the secret of more convenience, better treatment and increased profits. There is probably no feature of agriculture which would lend itself more readily to a general campaign than that of co-operation among farmers.

The formation of organization along a co-operative line would solve such problems as production, produce marketing, the purchase of supplies, dealing with railroad companies, etc. Transportation companies by negligence alone are frequently responsible for live stock shippers incurring losses.

In such instances the farmer must fight his battles along with possibly some little assistance from his commission firm. The expense of legal rights would be minimized considerably if a farmers' organization maintained a law department and fought all controversies for its members.

However, the most potent factor would be the influence of such an association—its effect, its power. Transportation companies cannot be induced by the individual farmer to change time tables, adjust rates or furnish accommodations to suit the convenience of the producer.

But should the farmers approach railway and express officials through a powerful organization of their own, not only would they be treated courteously, but such officials would quickly recognize the policy of catering to the organization.

The individual producer is practically entirely at the mercy of the middlemen, transportation companies and the consumer. Co-operation would result in the interests of the producer being protected, markets could be established and concerted action along any line would bear fruit. Co-operation among farmers is a step in the right direction.

The Onion Crop. An average crop of Bermudas is from 10,000 to 15,000 pounds per acre, although yields as high as 25,000 pounds have been reported.

Prices run from $1.25 to $2 per hundred-weight, the average being about $1.60. Careful growers average about $250 per acre, while the average cost of seed, growing and marketing is about $100 per acre.

The market handles onions in three grades—primes, seconds and picklers. Primes are those of one and one-fourth inches in diameter, while picklers are those that will pass through a three-fourth inch screen. While grading may be done in the field, onions shrink rapidly, and should be regraded before shipping.

Liability to Disappointment. The man who joins a co-operative company thinking only of the help he is to get from his neighbors is liable to be disappointed and, if there are many in the company who think only of the help they are to get without being willing to give help and support to the company in return, it will fail.
