Towns Closer Tegether and Boom ne Reasons Why Your Road May Be a Poor One.

One of the most important problems confronting the public today is the construction and maintenance of its roads. It is truly essential that we have good roads,

Good roads not only prove an advantage to the farmer commercially, but they are a pleasure to the motorist and bling towns and cities closer together, thereby inviting trade and transportation.

There are many reasons why road building in instances proves a failure, and it might be well to enumerate some of them: First, a road may be made too narrow to accommodate the traffle or so narrow that teams will track, cutting the surface into ruts.

The first thing to take into consid-ration in the proper construction of

The first thing to take into consideration in the proper construction of a road is location and directness. In speaking on this very subject one authority on good roads said recently.

Whenever possible roads should be located on straight lines." Continuing, he said. "The best, location is one which is straight in general direction, is free from steep grades, is over soild ground and serves the largest possible number of people."

The most desirable foundation for road construction is a natural pebbly surface. Telford uses the pitched foundation for a road which is subject to heavy traille. For an ordinary road a thickness of five or six inches of gravel or filit well rolled and watered should dires that he patronage go to loyal Democrats, but he will be in no hurry o hand out the spoils.
