HOW TO CURE DISEASED TREES

Some Cases Are Hopeless, but Majority Can Be Saved.

NECESSARY TOOLS ARE FEW

A Gouge, Mallet, Pruning Knife, Pot of Coal Tar and Paint Brush the First Essentials. Ladders, Saws, Etc., Are Convenient Auxiliary Instruments.

By ROY G. PIERCE, True Burghen Pennsylvania Chestnut Blight Commission.

What is to be done with diseased trees to bring them back to health or to prevent them from infecting other healthy trees near by? To bring the trees back to health implies that disease can be cured. This is not always true for the tree may be already nearly killed when the disease is first noticed. A tree taken in time, however, may have its life prolonged indefinitely, though it may have the blight in some position of it every year.

Professor J. Franklin Collins, forest pathologist in the department of agriculture, in farmers' bulletin 467, on "The Control of the Chestnut Bark Disease," gives the following: "The essentials for the work are a gouge, a mallet, a pruning knife, a pot of coal tar and a paint brush. In the case of a full tree a ladder or rope or both may be necessary. But under no circumstances should tree climbers be used, as they cause wounds which are very favorable places for infection. Sometimes an ax, a saw and a long handled tree pruner are convenient auxiliary instruments."

All of the discolored diseased areas in the tree should be removed. Small branches of twigs nearly girdled are best cut off. Cutters in the main trunk of an illness should be gouged out. Carefulness is the prime requisite.

CHESTNUT TREE AFTER TREATMENT.

In this work, if the disease has completely killed the cambium the bark should be entirely removed, as well as several layers of wood beneath the canker. By frequent examination, however, diseased spots may be found on the tree where the mycelium of the fungus is still in the upper layers of the bark. It is not necessary then to cut clear to the wood, but the discolored outer bark may be removed and a layer of healthy inner bark left beneath the cut. The sap may still flow through this layer. The border of the diseased area is quite distinct, but cutting should not stop here, but should be continued beyond the discolored portion into healthy bark at least an inch. The tools should be thoroughly sterilized by immersion into a solution of 1,000 biclode of mercury or 5 per cent solution of formaldehyde.

It has been shown that a cut made pointed at the top and bottom, healed faster than one rounded. The edges of the cut should be made with care so as not to injure the cambium. The chips of diseased bark and wood should not be allowed to fall on the ground, then to be forgotten. A bag fastened just below the canker will collect most of this material as it is gouged out and prevent possible infection, which might take place if the material were allowed to scatter about the bark. Canvass or burlap spread around under a small orchard tree might be sufficient to catch all of the diseased chips of bark and wood cut out of the lower infections. This disinfectant is pleasant to take (which makes it the ideal remedy to clean out the bowels of the little ones), it acts on the liver without harshness, gently but surely drives the poisonous gas and foul accumulation from the bowels.

The trees which have been killed by blight or nearly killed have been overlooked. These trees should be cut off close to the ground, the stump pulled and the bark and diseased portions of the tree burned over the stump. The unsightly scars of the tree should be removed from the woods promptly as all dead unburned wood furnishes an excellent breeding place for the blight fungus.—From Address at Meeting of Southern Plant Growers' Association at Lancaster, Pa.

SOCIETY

The regular physicians are studying not only methods to cure disease, but even more sympathetically are they engaged in the great problems of preventive medicine. Having appreciated the vast influence of lower forms of life (bacteria, protozoa, insects, etc.) upon human life and health, they have endeavored to make this knowledge practical and have succeeded, as is shown in the history of Cuba, the eradication of yellow fever from the south, the stamping out of human plague on the Pacific coast, and this is but a beginning. Parallel with this greatly increased work in preventive lines there has been a lessening of drug medication. This is not to say physicians have discarded drugs. They have not, and some are as wedded to drugs as ever. But among the more intelligent there is a gradually lessening dependence upon drugs and a gradually increasing dependence upon physical methods—diet and hygiene.—Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette.

Hamlet Under Difficulties. John Coleman, the celebrated actor, once played Hamlet under difficulties. The audience was small, and a sea-faring man, who had a prominent seat in the fourth row of the pit, was not very much impressed. After he had left ostentatiously three or four times, returning in a merrier frame of mind, Coleman stopped the play, walked to the footlights and said:

"If my friend would stay in his seat and keep his eye on me I think I could interest him."

"Hamlet" was then proceeded with, and the martinet drew from his pocket a telescope, which he extended to its full length and placed to his right eye, doing it so Coleman when he appeared in the play and following him as he proceeded the stage. As soon as Hamlet completed his speech the telescope was audibly shut up and then reopened as Hamlet began to speak. Coleman's Hamlet was not a success.—London Mail.

Sights in the Arctic. Explorers who penetrate the Arctic and Antarctic seas have a chance to observe one of the strangest phenomena in nature, that of smoke rising from the sea. Whenever the temperature falls to 15 degrees below zero clouds of steaming vapor ascend from the sea, to be immediately frozen into tiny particles of ice and dropped down more into the water. The same thing takes place on land, the vapor rising from the soil and great from the bodies of the explorers themselves. In this case, however, the ice particles fall on the ground and make a weird rattling, like the swirl of a silk dress. At 40 degrees below zero the sap of trees is turned to ice, and the trunks burst asunder with a sharp report. These mysterious sounds and sights are awe-inspiring to all who do not know their cause, and they may account for some of the strange tales that are told of the frozen north.

Woman's Prerogative. "Does your wife ever change her mind?" "Only on some minor matters," replied Mr. Meekton after careful thought. "I believe I recall that she once expressed an intention to love, honor and obey or something like that."—Washington Star.

CONVICTS ON JERSEY ROADS.

Fall to Work With a Will Their First Day in Chill Winter.

For the first time in the history of New Jersey public roads are being repaired by convict labor. Sixteen men from the state prison in Trenton were taken from the institution and hauled in a stage to the White Horse road, a few miles distant. Practically all of the prisoners had been serving many years, and they were unused to the biting blasts of winter, but they went to work with a will, and the authorities were highly pleased with the first day's experience. The men were under two guards, and at noon a dinner was served for them in a wayside hotel. They were sent back to the prison at nightfall.

Progress in Argentina. The Argentine Touring club has decided to award a special gold medal annually to the landowner in the province of Rio Negro who plants the most trees at the sides of the public highways. The trees may be fruit or forestal, and instructions and advice concerning planting may be had from the Touring club.

The Dog in the Manger. The incompetent, shiftless, worthless political office holder is the fellow who opposes better road legislation. If he wants to hold such a position, then why can't he think, study and qualify himself under a new road law and be a man? Conventions along this line can occur in warm as well as cold weather.
