NEW PLAN OF HEALTH WORK

The State Board of Health has changed its plan of fighting hookworm disease. Instead of selecting a county and spending a short time there—the dispensary method—the board now selects a community and sends a member of the force there to stay until every case of hookworm is treated and cured. In addition to that sanitary precautions are installed in every home in the community which will prevent hookworm disease, typhoid fever and all other diseases due to soil pollution.

One community Knotts Island, in Currituck county, has had already the benefit of such intensive work. There communities, Salemburg, in Sampson county, Castle Haynes and Wrightsboro in New Hanover county and Philadelphia in Robeson county, are being worked along this plan at the present time.

Any community in any county in the state may have such work done and the Board of Health invites interested individuals or officials to communicate with the office in Raleigh for further information.

The STORY of WAITTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

"You can see how much marriage has tamed your mother down," observed Uncle Bart dispassionately. "How-soever, though your mother can't be called tame, she's got her good points, for she's always to be counted on. The great thing in life, as I take it, Cephas, is to know exactly what to expect. Your mother's genially credited with an onerous temper, but folks does her great injustice in so thinking, for in a long experience I've seldom come across a temper less onerous than your mother's. You know exactly where to find her every mornin' at sunup and every night at sundown. There ain't nothin' you can do to put her out o' temper, 'cause she's all out aforehand. You can jest go about your regular business 'bout any fear of disturbin' her any further than she's disturbed already, which is considerable. I don't mind it a mite nowadays, though, after forty years of it. It would kind o' gall me to keep a siddy watch of a female's disposition day by day, wonderin' when she was goin' to have a tantrum. A tantrum once a year's an awful upsettin' kind of a thing in a family, my son, but a tantrum every twenty-four hours is jest part o' the day's work." There was a moment's silence, during which Uncle Bart puffed his pipe and Cephas whittled, after which the old man continued: "Then if you happen to marry a temper like your mother's, Cephas, look what a pow'ful worker you generally get! Look at the way they sweep and dust an' scrub an' clean! Watch 'em how they go at the dish washin' an' how they whack the rollin' pin an' how they mangle the clothes out o' the house! The mild and gentle ones likely enough will be settin' in the kitchen rocker readin' the stumace when there ain't no wood in the kitchen box, no doughnuts in the crock, no pies on the swing shelf in the collar an' the young ones goin' round without a second shift to their backs!"

Cephas' mind was far away during this philosophical dissertation on the ways of women. He could see only a sunny head fairly rioting with curls, a pair of eyes that held like magnets, although they never gave him a glance of love; a smile that lighted the world far better than the sun, a dimple into which his heart felt headlong whenever he looked at it.

"You're right, father; 'tain't no use kickin' ag'in 'em," he said as he rose to his feet preparatory to opening the Baxter store. "When I said that 'bout trainin' up a girl to suit me, I kind o' forgot the one I've picked out. I'm considerin' several, but the one I favor most—well, I believe she'd fire up at the first sight o' trainin', and that's the gospel truth."

"Cephas!" several, to you, Cephas, all I hope is that the one you favor most—the girl you've asked once already—is considerin' you!"

Cephas went to the pump and, wetting a large handkerchief, put it in the crown of his straw hat and sauntered out into the burning heat of the open road between his father's shop and Deacon Baxter's store.

"I shan't ask her the next time till this hot spell's over," he thought, "and I won't do it in that dogged old store ag'in, neither. I ain't so tongue tied outdoors, an' I kind o' think I'd be more in the spirit of it after sundown some night after supper!"

Waittill found a cool and shady place in which to hitch the old mare, loosening her checkrein and putting a sprig of alder in her headstall to assist her in brushing off the flies.

One could reach the Boynton house only by going up a long grassy lane that led from the high road. It was a lonely place and Aaron Boynton had bought it when he moved from Saco simply because he secured it at a remarkable bargain, the owner having lost his wife and gone to live in Massachusetts. Ivory would have sold it long ago had circumstances been different, for it was at too great a distance from the schoolhouse and from Lawyer Wilson's office to be at all convenient, but he dreaded to remove his mother from the environment to which she was accustomed and doubted very much whether she would be able to care for a house to which she had not been wonted before her mind became affected.

Here in this safe, secluded corner, amid familiar and thoroughly known conditions, she moved placidly about her daily tasks, performing them with the same care and precision that she had used from the beginning of her married life. All the heavy work was done for her by Ivory and Rodman; the boy in particular being the dearest footed, the most willing and the next best of helpers; washing dishes, sweeping and dusting, laying the table as deftly and quietly as a girl. Mrs. Boynton made her own simple dresses of gray calico in summer, or dark linsay-woolsey in winter by the same pattern that she had used when she first came to Edgewood; in fact, there were positively no external changes anywhere to be seen, tragic and terrible as had been those that had wrought

Studebaker
ECONOMICAL SIX

$1575

Assembled "Sixes" come down in price. But they cannot come up to the Studebaker SIX manufactured quality. The very hugeness of Studebaker SIX production is reason enough. No car produced in smaller quantities can have manufacturing advantages like the largest, most complete laboratory in the automobile industry—one that specifies formulas, analyzes and tests steels constantly, one that determines the exact number and kind of heat treatments required to bring out strength and hardness. The best organized and most efficient engineering department in the industry—the only one in active charge of car manufacturing. The finest of foundry and machine equipment in the world. These various factors make the Studebaker SIX the greatest motor car value in the world—at any price. And no car produced in smaller quantity can possibly enjoy such advantages. Send for the Studebaker Proof Book, describing Studebaker manufacturing methods.
