The Augusta Chronicle, under an article, "Talking It Over," has the following: "The trooper looked all right. Most of all the North Carolina troopers look all right. This one, even, did not look the worse for wear. But in Busbia Dennis' barbershop, yesterday, when he strolled in and placed his hands on a lavatory, he glanced at the mirror in front of him, all hands watched him. On his own image looking back at him from the mirror, he glanced a full half minute. "Here you," he ordered to himself to his reflection in the glass—"here you. Give me a glass of beer." NORTH CAROLINA TROOPS AT CAMP WHEELER NEAR CITY OF AUGUSTA GEORGIA

The following story is gleaned from the Augusta Chronicle of August 6, 1914, with reference to the North Carolina troops now in camp at Camp Wheeler, near the city of Augusta. The boys are having a glorious time. Colonel Wiley C. Rodman, of this city, is in command. The Chronicle says:

The North Carolina troops at Camp Wheeler had no fixed duty from headquarters yesterday. The day was spent getting their camp in shape and they progressed right well. In that, there is a smaller number of men in the North Carolina company than was here for Georgia—there are about 700 of them—the preparations, of course, are not so great in scope; and, at the same time, the North Carolina boys went right at their work yesterday morning like men well experienced in it and when leave was granted yesterday afternoon for a number of them to come into the city and look around, the camp was in excellent shape.

Communication from Adjutant General Lawrence W. Young, of North Carolina, to whom a special invitation was extended, says he regrets that it will be impossible for him to get to Augusta during the period the North Carolina troops are in camp here. The commanding officers at the camp are:

Second Infantry, North Carolina, National Guard, Col. W. R. Rodman, commanding.

Company A, Captain Paul Jones. Company B, Captain J. I. Brown. Company C, Captain J. H. Manning.

Company D, Captain S. E. Malone. Company E, Captain E. H. Bain. Company F, Captain A. G. Murchison.

Company G, Captain Edgar Hall. Company H, Captain G. K. Hobbs. Company I, Captain W. A. Barrow. Company K, Captain G. K. Freeman.

Company L, Captain J. B. Malloy. Company M, Captain J. L. Hines. Troop A, Cavalry, Captain W. A. Fair.

Troop B, Cavalry, Captain R. R. Reynolds. Infantry, First Lieutenant Raymond Pollock.

Camp Work Begins This Morning. The manner of instruction for the North Carolina troops will, after all, differ from the program arranged for the Georgia infantry and cavalry. For the first period of the division encampment a general program was made up at the outset, outlining in detail the work to be carried on during the entire period. This method will not be followed for North Carolina, but, instead, a daily program will be arranged and published at regimental and camp headquarters. The order for today, which was issued and promulgated yesterday morning, is as follows:

Headquarters Camp Wheeler, near Augusta, Ga., August 4, 1914. Memorandum: 1. The following program of instruction for tomorrow, August 5, 1914, is published for the information and guidance of all concerned: Infantry. A. M.—Elementary drill of company in extended order. Patrolling. (Lecture by instructor to officers and non-commissioned of each battalion, followed by practical work).

P. M.—Lecture by instructor to all officers and non-commissioned officers of each battalion on fire discipline, etc., and principles of attack.

Instruction of officers of First Battalion in first aid.

Battalion parade—First call, 6:15 p. m.

Assembly. Companies not engaged in the ceremony of parade will stand retreat in company streets.

Cavalry. A. M.—Squad: Adjournment of equipment.

Equitation. Extended order. Patrol work. Troop—Equitation. Extended order. Advance guard. Stables.

P. M.—Officers and non-commissioned officers' school. Tactical ride—officers (patrol work). Water.

By order of Colonel Mallory, Captain, Twenty-ninth Infantry, Adjutant.

How the Camp Looks.

The scene at Camp Wheeler is quite familiar, yet the camp site is not nearly so well filled as it was last week. Recollection of the space occupied at that time, measured with that occupied by the North Carolina troops, now makes it perfectly plain that there would have been an abundance of room to make care of even more troops than North Carolina and Georgia on the ground at one time.

The cavalry is occupying the same ground occupied by the Georgia cavalry, and found some of the conveniences arranged for the Georgia mounted militia quite handy arranged for the second camp. The two troops are very well experienced body of horsemen and present quite an attractive showing. A particularly noticeable feature in the cavalry camp is the well-groomed, well-kept horses.

The infantry camp was pitched nearer the main road than was the camp last week—that is, regimental headquarters, instead of being near the location of General Harris' brigade headquarters, is on a location near where the Georgia field hospital stood. This brings the entire North Carolina camp down near the main road.

Generally the men express complete satisfaction with the camp site, despite the fact that the weather was not as propitious for their arrival on the ground as when Georgia camp. It is noticeable, though, that the camp is not in the least soggy, and there is a complete absence of mud, except on the road from O'Dowd's corner to the camp site, after a rain of half a night and all of a day. The drainage of the site has had an excellent test, and has proven all the officers here with the Georgia outfit said it would be in case of rain.
