THE PROGRESS OF THE WAR.

Neither group of allies can yet be said to have won or lost. But it begins to look as if the Germanic alliance is doomed.

Austria-Hungary's defense is broken; she seems to have little strength or spirit even for a last stand against Russia, and can give her ally no assistance. And as far as Germany is concerned, the events of the past week tend to convince onlookers that nothing but a miracle can save her from final defeat.

The retreat of the German armies after their triumphant progress toward Paris has not been an overwhelming disaster. But it has destroyed the German soldiers' belief in their own invincibility. It has broken the prestige of German militarism in the eyes of the world and driven fear from the hearts of the allies. Every fighter against the Teuton millions now knows that German soldiers are merely flesh and blood and nerves lines themselves, subject to exhaustion, discouragement and fear; they know that German officers, in spite of their superb training and traditions, are not supermen; they do not believe that Kaiser Wilhelm is another Frederick the Great.

So, even if the German armies form again on favorable ground and the German line stands firm, flings back the allies and starts another march toward Paris, its morale will be weakened and its strength lessened, while the allies will possess the advantage of confidence, well equipped armies, fighting for their cause in a friendly and applauding country and reinforced until their numerical strength is equal or superior to that of the invaders.

Moreover, the Germans have lost their most decisive battle—the fight against time. The last three weeks at Liege. They lost three weeks more in the fruitless plunge toward Paris and the heart-breaking retreat. Their aggressive power lessens with the lapse of every day.

Meanwhile the French have tardily got all their war forces into the field and are drilling recruits by the hundred-thousands; the English have poured big armies into France and Belgium and are steadily drawing reinforcements from every corner of their great empire; the Russians, now dealing the death-blow to Austria, are about to roll their vast armies against the defenders of East Prussia and begin the threatened progress to Berlin.

In spite of Germany's grim determination to win "even against a world of enemies," the case looks desperate. And if she achieves the impossible against the present coalition, other nations are ready to take the field against her.

PREPAREDNESS.

Among all the stories of Germany's marvelous thoroughness in preparation for war, this one surely takes the prize. It is quoted from a dispatch written by John T. McCutcheon, the Chicago Tribune war correspondent, with the German army:

"The same careful mind," he says, "that have evolved siege guns that fire dynamite shells five feet long and fourteen inches in diameter, such as were used at Liege, have worked out the apparently insignificant but really important detail of having two sets of suspender buttons on the trousers of soldiers, so that their failure to function of one set need not delay the man in his onward march."

An American army might swear to "take Paris or bust a suspender." But the German army, however mightily it strives, will preserve its galluses intact and on the job.

many, invading Belgium, found it advisable to make the Belgians contribute large sums of money for the German war chest. Whereupon a loyal New York German named Werner Rothke, was inspired to do likewise according to his ability.

Rothke invaded the residence of a Belgian friend named Richard Rink, at New Rochelle, and abstracted $54 from his wallet, replacing the bills with a clipping from a German newspaper telling of the $40,000,000 fine imposed on Brussels. Then he started back to New York, with the intention of sending the money to the Kaiser to help pay the war expenses.

On his way Rothke happened to meet up with an armed entral in the person of a policeman named McKeon. The German, being a novice at the indenting business, took flight at sight of the officer and started to run, whereupon he was chased two miles, captured and lodged in jail.

The only thing wrong with this German invasion of New Rochelle was that the invader lacked the courage of his convictions. If he had been as certain as Kaiser Wilhelm that he had a divine right to

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF WASHINGTON.

TO THE FARMERS:—

The business men of Washington are building a cotton storage warehouse in which you can store your cotton, for which a negotiable warehouse receipt will be issued. You can bring this warehouse receipt to the First National Bank, and they will advance you $30.00 a bale. This will enable you to harvest your crops and meet pressing obligations. It is absolutely necessary that your cotton be kept off the market. Do not sell for less than ten cents per pound. The business men of Washington and this Bank will co-operate with you, and by a united effort you will get a fair price for your cotton.

THE WAREHOUSE WILL BE COMPLETED BY NOVEMBER 1. DO NOT SELL YOUR COTTON FOR LESS THAN 10 CENTS PER POUND.
