

NO END NOW IN SIGHT AFTER EIGHTEEN DAYS OF HARD FIGHTING

The 1914 day of the battle at the Alps ends the allied armies pushing with all its strength they can bring to bear in their great effort to outflank the German right wing and force it back from its line of communication through Belgium.

There is evidence that this movement is beginning to tell and that unless something unforeseen happens this portion of the German army must fall back to another defensive line.

The German main supply base at Julaville is now protected by heavy masses of troops.

The line of battle has changed considerably since the beginning of the actual contact between the two great armies, whose number and real positions it is not as yet been permitted to make public.

A French official report states that the action continues to develop to the northward. The Germans admit that they have been unable to arrest the French attack against their right end, also that the allies have advanced on their right.

The German wings appear to be falling back in the center, leaving the sole loophole for a backward movement by way of Bethel.

The Germans are sacrificing thousands of men daily. The front now presents abrupt winds inward and outward in a country wonderfully adapted for defense.

FINE TREAT OF SEASON HERE OCT. 7

If it is possible if any visitor to Washington, D. C., has failed to see the production, "Fine Feathers," which ran in those cities at the time. The attendance at this wonderful play was record-breaking, and that it happens that there is scarcely a town in America that does not contain several people who have already seen this production. That is why so much interest is being displayed here in the coming appearance of "Fine Feathers" at the New Theatre October 7. The several local people who saw the play in New York or Chicago last season have been praising it to the skies and advising their friends not to miss it if it ever came to this city. "Fine Feathers" is a tremendous play of today by Eugene Walter, the author of "Paid in Full," "The Wolf" and "The Eastway."

Throwing the searchlight of dramatic exploitation on certain phases of our modern existence. Its characters are drawn from life, its problems are familiar to every man and woman in the average theatre audience, and its treatment is fearless, frank and convincing. Its coming here should prove the dramatic treat of many seasons.

VISITOR TODAY. The many friends of Mr. L. H. Padgett, of Rocky Mount, formerly of this city, are glad to see him here today.
