ARCHIBALD IS ON THE JOB

Exciting Work of the British Anti-aircraft Gun Described—Sight of Airplane Under Shell Fire Never Less Its Thrill.

By FREDERICK PALMER,
 International News Service Correspondent,
 British Headquarters, France.

A crack and a flash through the air. No sound is more familiar at the front where the artillery is never silent. The sound of a shell breaking from a gun muzzle and its swift flight toward the enemy's line to pay the Germans back for some shell they have sent.

Only this one did not pass out over the landscape in a long parabola or toward the German lines. It went right up into the heavens at about the angle of a skyrocket—for it was Archibald who was on the job.

Six or seven thousand feet over the British trenches there was something as big as your hand against the light blue of the summer sky. This was the target, a German aeroplane. By the end of his wings you knew it was a Taube, just as you know a meadow lark from a swallow.

So high was it that it seemed almost stationary. But it was going somewhere between fifty and ninety miles an hour. It seemed to have all the heavens to itself; and to the British it was a sinister, prying eye. It wanted to see if they were building any new trenches, if they were moving bodies of troops or of transport in some new direction, and where their batteries were in hiding. That aviator, three miles above the earth, had many vantage points at his command. A few signals from his wireless and they would let loose on the target he indicated.

Never Loses Its Thrill.

Other features of life at the front may grow commonplace, but never the work of the planes—these wings of the army's intelligence. In the hide-and-seek digging and dodging and countering of step warfare the sight of a plane under shell fire never loses its thrill.

A couple of seconds after that crack a tiny puff of smoke breaks at a hundred yards behind the Taube. A soft thistle blow against the blue, it seems at that altitude; but it wouldn't if it were about your ears. Then it would sound like a bit of dynamite on an avial strike by a hammer, and you would hear the whizz of scores of bullets and fragments about your ears.

The smoking brass shell was out of Archibald's steel throat, and another shell case with its charge slipped in its place and started on its way before the first puff breaks. The aviator knows what is coming. He knows that one means many, once he is in range.

Archibald rushed the fighting; it is the business of the Taube to sidestep. The aviator cannot hit back except through its allies, the German batteries on the earth. They would take care of Archibald if they knew where he was. But all that the aviator can see is mottled landscape. From his side Archibald flies no goal flags. He is one of ten thousand tiny objects under the aviator's eye.

All the Romance There.

Why he was named Archibald nobody knows. As his full name is Archibald the archer, possibly it comes from some association with the idea of archery. If there were ten thousand anti-aircraft guns in the British army, every one would be known as Archibald. When the British expeditionary force went to France it had none. All the British could do was to hang away at Taubea with thousands of rounds of rifle bullets, which might fall in their own lines, and with the field guns.

It was pie in those days for the Taubea. It was easy to keep out of range of both rifles and guns and observe well. If the Germans did not know the progress of the British retreat from on high, it was their own fault. Now the business of firing at Taubea is left entirely to Archibald. When you see how hard it is for Archibald, after all his practice, to get a Taube, you understand how foolish it was for the field guns to try to get one.

Archibald, who is quite the swiftest thing in the army, has his own private car built especially for him. While the cavalry horses back of the line grow sleek from inaction, the aeroplanes have taken their places. All the romance and risk of scouting are theirs. They get most of the fun there in this kind of warfare. If a British aviator gets a train or steamer, he flies from the aviation grounds about half past four and is at home in England for dinner and returns after lunch the next day. All the action the cavalry see is when they go into the trenches as infantry.

Important Work is Archibald's.

Such of the cavalry's former part as the planes do not play, Archibald plays. He keeps on the enemy's scouts. Do you seek team-work, esprit de corps and smartness in this theater of France, where all the old glamour of war is lacking? You will find it in the attendance of Archibald. They have aids, assistants, paper and all the other appurtenances and comforts. They are as neat as a private yacht's crew and as lively as an infield of a major league team. The Archibalds are naturally bound to think well of themselves.

Watch them there, every man having his part, as they pass daily

ARE SEARCHING FOR HEIRESS

Wilmington, N. C., Sept. 2.—An effort is being made throughout the country to locate Lady Geraldine, the only daughter of Sir Reginald O. Wingate, of London, who recently died, leaving a large estate, all of which will go to George Wingate, Jr., nephew of the late Sir Reginald, unless the daughter can be located by October 1. She was in Wilmington for some weeks the latter part of June and first of July, registering under the name of Mrs. G. Wadleigh, representing a woman's literary club. She left here for Atlanta, where she was heard from on July 27, but since then there has been no trace of her, and representatives of Lord & Lord of London fear she has committed suicide, and is regarded as an adventuress. She was educated in the United States, and her adventures led the family to disown her. A traveling man who knew her here has been written for information he has about her.

NEWS FROM NEARBY CITIES

Ayden is to have a town hall, of brick, two stories, with the municipal offices on the second floor and a market and quarters for a proposed fire department on the first. It will be located in the center of the business district.

Improvement of the road from Dover to Fort Barwell is being urged. Nine miles of the thoroughfare is said to be in extremely bad shape.

Mrs. R. C. Cotten, of Greenville, will address women of Ayden interested in the organization of a civic league on Sunday.

A planter living near New Bern who had a calf killed by a train took the carcass to the market in that city for sale. Health officers seized it and condemned a part of the meat. The animal, it was proved, had just been killed a few hours.

KINSTON NEGRO IS ACQUITTED

(By Eastern Press)

Kinston, Sept. 2.—Richard Cobb, colored, was discharged in the City Court late Tuesday when Judge Woolan found that charges of incest and criminal assault brought by his 16-year-old daughter by a dead wife without foundation. Sylvia Cobb, it is said, had been caught in improper conduct with a man, and her father chastised her. In revenge she had a warrant drawn alleging that he had forced her to an inhuman purpose. In the hearing she admitted that the treatment she had received was not such to justify the warrant, and she practically admitted to counsel for the defense that the charges were false.

HUSKY FARMER KISSED BRYAN

A dispatch to the Philadelphia North American says:
 John Graber, a big, husky, be-whiskered farmer, kissed W. J. Bryan at the conclusion of the colonel's chautauqua address at Kinston. The impact came so sudden that Bryan did not have an opportunity to sidestep. When the kiss had been planted squarely on his lips the former secretary backed away and murmured something like "Thank you."
 Bryan had touched on the war during his lecture, and his eloquence had stirred Graber's heart. He said he could not resist the grand salute.
 "Mr. Bryan, I have read your paper for years, and have admired you," Graber said. "I made up my mind that if ever I got a chance to see you I would kiss you."
