mel-strayed about the streets of Bangkok, homeless and unfed, till at times there were as many-as 10,000 stray cats and dogs roaming about."

"Didn't anybody feed them?" asked Jack.

"The Siames people are very fond of animals, but there is hardly enough food for even poor children. So the poor dogs and cats had to get on as they could. Nobody was allowed to throw stones at this throng of animals, and the rudest street by in Bangkok would not think of peiting them. Some of the cats have no hair, and disease makes them look very unpleasant. But kind hearted priests often rub the poor things with coccannt oil and lift them into the shade out of the ecorching rays of, the hot tropleal sim. So with a great deal of kindness shown them these poor Siamese creatures still had a hard life, because what all animals like best of all is plenty of good food."

"They're something like children, aren't they?" smiled Jack.

"Very much!" daddy agreed.

"I once knew a man who visited Bangkok, and he told me that nights it was almost impossible to sleep because so many hundreds of homeless dogs howled and fought in the streets. But Siamese cats are very gentle and make beautiful pets. They have charming long silky fur and pink eyes, with heavy tuffs of fur on the tips of their tails. They like all sorts of petting. This friend of mine once sent a pair of them to a lady be knew, and she was delighted to play with them. She fed them daintily with warm inlik and boiled rice, because meat, which they had never had, always made them sick. She kept them in the occlost place in her home, away from all drafts and wind. letting them outdoors only on warm summer days. But she could not keep them in a northland, and the poor things died like strangers in an unfriendly rountry. You will be glad to know that the king of Siam a few years ago gave enough money to build kennels for those 10,000 homeless dogs, so that now the streets of Bangkok are quieter." Said daddy. gave enough money to build kennels for those 10,000 homeless dogs, so that now the streets of Bangkok are quieter," said daddy, "Could we have a cat from Slam?" asked Jack.

"I'd rather have an American kitty!" cried Evelyn. And daddy promised her in return for a big hug.

THE PRODUCTION OF GREEN DUCKLINGS

Drepared by United States department at agriculture.]

Intensive duck forming is said in a new publication of the United States department of agriculture, builletin No. 607, to have proved in general more successful on a large scale than intensive chicken raising. Poking ducas in particular, which are used for the production of green ducklings, stand confinement well, are more easily broaded and are less subject to discase than chickens. On the other hand, the market for green ducks is confined almost entirely to the large citie and the prospective duck caiser will so well therefore to investigate the marketing as well as the producing possibilities of the industry. the industry.
Green ducklings are marketed when

The duck farm should be located or light sandy soil, generally on sloping land, which can be kept sweet and lean. Good shipping facilities are secessary in order both to market the product satisfactorily and to bring h supplies. Convenient watering as rangements are essential, too, as duck require a large amount of drinking wa ter. It is also advisable to allow con-siderable yard space, and double yards which may be rotated and planted to quick growing crops are useful on larg Simple buildings similar to henhouses are used for breeding ducks. A shed roof house from twelve to fifteen feet deep, seven feet high in front and four feet in the rear is satisfactory, good sized musiln.curain and one wir dow in the front of each pen makes good front. Plenty of ventilation is es sential, and in the south it is usually advisable to have an opening under the caves in the rear of the house for this purpose. Plenty of litter should be used on the floor, and the ducks should be allowed to make their own nests because they are more apt to break their eggs if nest boxes are used. A convenient formula for estimating the size of the house of pen is to allow siz feet of floor space for each duck.

Mating the Flocks.

Ordinarily from five to six males are allowed for a flock of thirty for males. About the lat of May this number may be reduced to one make for every seven females and later in the year still further.

Neither the Peking duck, used chief

Neither the Peking duck, used chiefly for the production of green ducks for market, nor the Indian Runner duck, which holds in the duck family a position somewhat similar to the Leghorn in the chicken family, is a good sitter. In consequence practically all of the large farms latte their eggs in incubators. Formerly lump incubators of from 200 to 400 egg capacity were used, but in many cases these have been replaced by the larger size Incubator. Duck incubators are usually kept at a slightly lower, temperature than those used for chickens. For the first three weeks the machine should be kept at about 102 degrees P and for the last week at 103 degrees or and for the last week at 103 degrees slightly higher at hatching time. It is usually advisable to supply moisture for ducks' eggs during the last week

All eggs should be tested at least day of December, 1914, and recorde All eggs should be tested at least twice, during incubation, preferably on the seventh and fourteenth days, and the infertile eggs resoured. Those with dead germs should also be taken out at once, as they decompose very rapidly. The infertile eggs make good feed for ducklings or can be used for cooking. The testing should be done in a dark room and the large end of the egg held up, so that the site of the arreels may be seen. When held before the tester on infertile our w look perfectly clear, much like a fresh little blood veins extending in all di rections. When the embryo is dead the blood settles away from it over the edge of the yolk, forming what is known as a blood risa.
