

Cottolene

"The Natural Shortening"

Yes, you can have real "old time" corn bread

It's hard to find a man anywhere who doesn't like real corn bread.

And it is just about as hard to make real old time corn bread, unless you use Cottolene in it. Try the recipe given at the right.

Then you will appreciate all the more why Cottolene makes good cooking better.

Your grocer will supply you regularly with Cottolene—in just the right-sized pail for your family.

For foods of better taste and quality use Cottolene in your shortening, frying and cake-making.

Old time corn bread

One pint sifted yellow corn meal, one pint flour, one pint sour milk, two eggs beaten light, one-half cup sugar, Cottolene about the size of a small egg, melted and added last thing, one tablespoon soda added to the milk. Add to the beaten eggs the milk and meal mixture by thin the Cottolene to 3 parts. Bake twenty minutes in hot oven.

From "HOME HELPS," market for it in a white ear General Office, Chicago.
