Railroad Strike Would Have Disastrous Affect On Mail Order Houses

A railroad strike, that threatens to tie up the entire country is scheduled to take place on Monday, unless Congress averts such action by then.

If the railroads, leading into Washington, ceased operation on Monday, some of those people, who buy their goods from mail order houses, would be in a bad fix. If the strike lasted for any length of time, they would probably starve to death, and their clothes would be in tatters.

But the man and the woman, who buy at home, have nothing to fear from the strike. They know that they can go down the street, or come to town, and get whatever they need.

The mail order houses are hoping and praying that the strike will not take place. Every business in the country would probably be affected to some extent, but the mail order business would be entirely ruined. They would be unable to supply the wants of a single customer.

But the home merchant stands ready at all times to serve you, and, strike or no strike you can depend upon him to provide you with what you want at prices that are always fair and just.

Buy it at home; keep the money at home, and we will all prosper because of it.

The Cartoon Tell The Story

In every town in the country you will find that the retail merchant in that town stands ready to duplicate any quotation made in the catalogs of the mail order houses—in most instances will do much better—in fact, on the same character of merchandise if you will pay cash and accept inferior goods, upon which no reputable manufacturer's name is to be found, your local merchant will sell you for less money. It is a notorious fact that no reputable manufacturer will sell his output to the catalog houses. The only thing the mail order house is after is your money—and the money you send them goes out of your community forever. Your local merchant is in his place of business every day of the year, ready to back up every article he sells. His business is legitimate, the success of his business contributes to the general prosperity of the entire community. This is the economic principles upon which the internal commerce of this country has been built.
