Walnut Cracking Growing Industry

Black Walnuts Are Bringing Thousands Of Dollars Annually To North Carolina Farmers, According To R. W. Graeber

Black walnuts, as a source of cash income, are bringing North Carolina farmers thousands of dollars each year.

Harvesting the annual crop, which runs into hundreds of Carolina because of the spread of thousands of bushels in this state alone, is now an important industry, according to R. W. Graeber, extension forester at State college.

Only a few years ago great quantities of the nuts were allowed to waste, but now they are being sold in the shell and as cracked kernels in grocery, candy and drug stores almost evervwhere.

> one year. This is only an indication of the walnut business in North Carolina, Graeber said. One farm cooperative organization bought 90,000 pounds of nuts last year.

> Soon after the nuts have fallen from the trees, they should be gathered so that they may be hulled while the husk is partly green, Graeber pointed out. Old type corn shellers are often used for hulling the nuts.

After they have dried in a shady place for two or three weeks, the nuts are ready for cracking, storage or seed. Cracking may be done with a hammer, although many prefer one of the commercial nut crackers which are now on the market.

A crackery operator told Grae-Wallace, of Charlotte, spent the ber that with one hand machine he had been able to crack ten bushels of nuts a day over a period of many weeks.
