Through a series of amusing adventures they hook up with another backer, Raymond Walburn, who wants the picture to ballyhoo redheads and sell his patent hair dye. Walburn is also more than a little interested in furthering the film fortunes of the loveliest redhead of them all, Dixie Lee.

There are unavoidable complications in the love triangle formed by Boles, Miss Lee and Walburn. But in the end, they manage to complete the movie and the love path of Boles and Miss Lee is cleared.

Boles offers his gayest, most versatile performance in "Redheads on Parade" as he dances, marketing in September and sings and romances. And Miss Lee, in her first big role since her return to the screen, proves a beauty sensation with an unique and catchy singing style.
