SMALLEST TRIPLET DIES; OTHERS FINE

Elaine Pratt, smallest of triplets born to a Chadbourn colored couple near Chadbourn nearly three weeks ago, died Friday in spite of all the efforts of health officials and doctors to save them all. Meanwhile, the other two of the triplets, Thomas and Evangeline, are doing fine.

Delivered with only the attention of a colored midwife, the three little colored babies thrived for two weeks, but early last week the smallest of the trio, weighing 21/2 pounds at birth, succumbed to unde-termined filness.

The birth of triplets has been rare in Columbus county in past several years. In modern times, not more than three sets of triplets have been reared successfully in the county.

Strain On Eyes

A few pecan trees in the farm yard will furnish pleasant shades in summer and make an attractive background for the home, and the nuts may be marketed at a good price.

Robert Schmidt, associate horticulturist at the N. C. Agriculaturist at the Paperiment Station, says that pecans thrive on variety of soils; heavy clays, light sandy soils, and river bottoms that are well drained.

The trees will not do well on soils underlain with quicksand or hardpan, or on land that is to wet.

soils underlain with quicksand or hardpan, or on land that is too wet.

Before setting out pecans, the land should be well cultivated. The young trees may be set out in the late fall or early winter. Where winters are severe, they should be set out in early spring.

Trees three to four years old and four to six feet in height are best for transplanting. Older and larger trees are harder to set out, more expensive to buy, and less likely to live. In this State budded trees are better than root-grafted trees.

On the coastal plain a number of standard varieties may be grown successfully. Schmidt recommended Schley, Stuart, Success, Pabst, Alley, and Moneymaker. Mahan and Brake's Seedling are also promising new varieties, he said.

For the lower piedmont area the Stuart variety is probably the most reliable. In the upper Piedmont and the mountain counties Schmidt recommends the northern varieties such as Indiana and Busseron.

Trees should be planted 60 the eyesight, of those students who started out with the greatest apart, each way, when setting out small orchards. They may also be placed in yards, fence corners, and other convenient places around the farm.
