

ONE-MINUTE INTERVIEWS

(By W. B. Keziah)

Somehow this week's column lacks in variety of subjects covered. However, it more than makes up for that by being clearly indicative that a lot of our people are deeply interested in the following yacht races. The folks who have been asked to say a word for publication all wanted to talk about the races.

SEES GOOD BUSINESS

"Speaking just as a business man, I am greatly interested in the yachting regatta for the simple reason that I think it will mean more to the business interests of the town than any sportive or educational event that we have ever had. Of course, there will be no charge for seeing the boats in action, all that is free. The monetary gain to the business interests of the town will come out of the fact that several thousand people will be here for three full days. They will spend money for boats, rooms, meals, etc. The races will draw many people into making their first visit to Southport and many of them will come again and again for some of our fine sport fishing or to spend a week or two vacationing here." Rufus Doshier.

WILL ATTRACT FOLKS

"I don't blame our young folks and some who are not so young for being so interested in those yacht races that are to be held here next month. In my opinion, wonderful good will come out of it to both the town and county. There will be a lot of people attracted to Southport and Brunswick county for the first time and some of them are bound to become interested and helpful friends to this part of the state." Robert W. Davis.

TWO FORESTERS RESCUED FROM GREEN SWAMP

CCC forces were planning early yesterday to send 300 men into the swamp with a tractor to cut a road along the timber line the men set up if they had not been found. Aviators at Blue-thenthal field, unaware the men had been located, were planning to fly over the dense swamp in an effort to sight them.

"We have worked in thirteen states," Hale, who has been in the forestry service for four years said, "and it is the toughest I have seen from the post oak ridges to Texas and the mountains of Oklahoma to the eastern seacoast."

And more swamp await their attention, he said, for after they have run their line through Green Swamp they will soon encounter Cawcaw swamp, which they expect to be "just as tough" as Green Swamp, since it is 9 1/2 miles across.

The young men were a pitiful sight to behold. Carow's arms and legs were a raw mass of flesh from which the skin had been torn and scratched. Hale was in little better condition.

But their attitude was that it is all part of the day's work, and as soon as they have rested a bit, regained their strength and made arrangements to cut their way through, they will go back to the deepest spot in the swamp and continue to run the timber line on through.

Members of the rescue party expressed amazement at the ability of Rabon, who lead the party in the search last night.

"There was little trail which led into Moore's Island which hadn't been used all summer," one member of the party said, "and that fellow followed it without a miss. It was just about this wide," he said, indicating a space of about two feet with his hands, "but he kept right to it."

"We could never have found them if it hadn't been for Rabon. That man knows that swamp like the palm of his hand."

often willing to make small loans to enable farmers to put their farms on a paying basis, on the strength of adjustments made through the efforts of local county Farm Debt Adjustment committees.

A few farmers who ask for rehabilitation loans find that all they need is debt adjustment and advice in sound, up-to-date farm methods. They are glad to get back on a paying basis without borrowing more money.

"The fact that this service aids creditors as well as debtors is borne out by reports that just about as many creditors as debtors over the nation have applied for voluntary farm debt conciliation assistance," Mr. Baucom stated.

Farm Debt Adjustment aid available through the Resettlement office has helped debtors and creditors reach voluntary agreements in 977 cases in this state. These adjustments have brought $70,319 back taxes into public treasuries throughout the state.

STUART HOUSE

pleasantly related of her by the old inhabitants. Beneath her strong character, there was a kind and loyal heart. She was an uncompromising rebel and during the occupation of Southport by the Federals, she was unrestrained and untrifled in the expression of her devotion to the Confederate cause. During the war, says a friend, she kept open house, sheltering and feeding all confederates who came "without money and without price." At her house the 20th North Carolina regiment was formed, Mrs. Stuart tendering a collation to celebrate it. At this inn, over a period of an army and naval officers, government officials, lawyers, judges, and visitors from many sections and many states have been received and kindly entertained. More distinguished men have stopped here over a period of years than perhaps at any other hotel in the state. Mrs. Stuart always interested her distinguished guest, and many of the prominent men of the state were among her personal friends. For half a century all the members of the bar have been entertained at this house, and, if its walls could speak they could tell of many an interesting evening joyously spent by members of the profession. In 1884, at the spring term of the Superior court, Mrs. Stuart died. The members of the bar came reverently to look at the remains of their old friend, and the court adjourned in respect to her memory. She was always partial to the lawyers and favored them by kind entertainment. It was her custom when court met and the house was crowded, to put the young lawyers in the loft, and reconcile them with the suggestion that no man attending Southport court could be judge until he had slept in that room. So it passed into tradition, and so happened with many, who slept there, that it was a necessary prerequisite for the judgeship. The writer has tried it. He is not yet a judge, however, and is losing faith in the tradition. Perhaps time will prove it.

At all times Mrs. Stuart's heart was full of the milk of human kindness. She never turned a deaf ear to any one in distress. In a seaport town, where sailors or seamen were frequently stranded, often sick, she would take them in and care for them, and often, she would afterwards receive from some appreciative person a sack of coffee, or barrel of molasses, sugar or other donation, for in those days of limited resources, these things were not easily obtainable, accompanied by a message from the donor, who withheld his name, "fro a seaman you took in and nursed."

The writer whose early childhood days were spent in Southport, recalls with grateful pleasure Mrs. Stuart. Often, when in mischief or dangerously near the water's edge, he has been overhauled by Mrs. Stuart with a scolding that would frighten the wits out of his boyish head, only to be immediately seized by the hand, lead into the pantry of the hotel, there to be fed by her own cakes, tarts and tenderness.

Since the death of Mrs. Stuart, her daughter, Miss Kate, has continued to keep the old house open to guests. Every one who knows her respects and loves Miss Kate. Her guests, coming to her as strangers, leave her with sentiments of friendship. A woman of education and refinement, loyal to friends and kind to all, she makes of herself a delightful hostess. The old house, though the storms of a century have beat upon it, still stands with its white walls, stunch brick columns, and hospitable doors open to welcome and entertain all who may come. It has not the modern conveniences. It has all necessary to give comfort and health. To modernize would be to destroy it of its uniqueness, and disassociate of its past memories. A mould of neatness, with meals served from the sea and cooked in old fashion home like style, no one who has stopped here, partaken of its hospitality, sat upon its broad porches looking out across the bay to the broad Atlantic, while sea breezes refreshed the warmth of a summer day, would care to see it modernized—certainly not as long as Miss Kate Stuart remains its mistress and hostess.
