WASHINGTON LETTER
WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Private pow-wows among Congressional groups during the last few days indicate that the powerful coalitions among Republicans and Democrats, which functioned so effectively at the last regular session, will be revived for this term. The extent to which these cooperatives will go in their cohesiveness in matters of legislative policy cannot be determined at this early date. Nevertheless the mere existence of these bipartisan blocs provokes serious thought among the responsible party chieftains.

The attitude of the coalition toward newer problems of trade agreements, national defense expenditures, farm relief and taxation has been clearly defined because they have not been afforded much time for determination of policies. The fact that the political complexion of the next Administration and the next Congress hinges upon the issues now before the legislative assembly contributes to the uncertainty as to what will come of it all. There is much ado on all partisan fronts about retrenchment in public expenditures but no agreement is in the offing.

The Roosevelt proposal for national defense has provoked widespread comment. The early reactions forecast a "go slow" position in Congress. Some lawmakers contend that too much spending for armament at this time might be a forerunner of our participation in the European war. Others, having in mind the experiences of last fall which revealed the shortcomings of the belligerent's weapons, insist that this country should delay arming to permit further revelations under the tests of strenuous warfare expected with the arrival of spring weather on European battlefields.

While there is a well-marked trend of sentiment toward keeping out of overseas wars, it is expected that the debate of certain proposed legislation will accentuate the cost of hostilities in the people's minds. The Connally tax bill providing for a drastic over-all tax levy to defray war costs will probably make the average citizen realize what the entrance of this country into foreign entanglements would mean in dollars and cents. A departmental error is said to have been responsible for sending the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy for commandeering powers in an emergency into the welter of Congressional debate. The consideration of the proposal will undoubtedly project the whole question of Presidential wartime powers into the political arena in a campaign year. Because polls and personal mail reveal hostility on the part of an overwhelming majority of voters toward American entry into war the Edison proposal for extraordinary grants of power to the Chief Executive even for an emergency rather than actual war and the Connally tax measure, which hits all pocket-books, are designed to keep the Congress peace-conscious.

The reciprocal trade agreement issue so vital to the candidacy of Secretary of State Cordell Hull as the Presidential nominee is an absorbing topic. Some leaders would prefer early settlement of the trade policy to sidetrack the inclusion of the subject in party platforms this summer as a national partisan referendum. The solons are not at all certain as to the effect of these trade agreements. It is stated that the State Department is disposed to over-statements as to the triumphs of their negotiating policies with foreign countries and not entirely familiar with the effects on domestic industries.

The Congressional axemen are whetting their weapons in anticipation of an investigation of Secretary of Interior Ickes. The Cabinet officer, a stormy petrel, forced the removal of Director Finch of the Bureau of Mines and shifted 11 minor officials with Civil Service rating. The inquiry will probably break out in full blast when an appointment is made which requires Senate confirmation. Ickes is charged with discharging the veteran director because he refused to fix up reports to coincide with the Secretary's policies and also resisted the domination of John L. Lewis over this Federal agency.

The Jackson Day dinner which is considered a Democratic love-feast was anything but. Reports of rump meetings before and after the dinner show that the political talk turned toward the cliques which are struggling for control of the party's nominating convention. Those who expected the President to clear the atmosphere and relieve the tension as to his plans for the future are still puzzled by his remarks. Dinner guests from Capitol Hill revealed the rise of the Garner bloc, which is proceeding on their own way without regard to Mr. Roosevelt's wishes in the matter of a party nominee. Some speculation is evident about the policy which Robert Jackson, the new Attorney-General, will follow as to indictment of union labor leaders in the construction field for conspiracy to boost building costs. Jackson has been closer to the

they were living in the present, and that the vessel they were looking at was the one they had heard of and talked about or a year as she lay building on the bank of Ipswich River. During that year of building many and heated were the discussions about her."

The Swift and Vera Cruz were both bound for Miami for demonstration purposes. Builder Robinson appeared vastly proud of his beautiful and interesting boats, as he had every reason to be. He told the representative of this paper that the foreman and several of the shipwrights at his yards helped to build the great Gloucesterman, Gertrude Thebaud—a vessel well known on the coast and of international fame. One of his shipwrights, John Hubbard, is now 82-years of age.

"The pride of the yard at Ipswich at the present time," said Mr. Robinson, "is the largest clipper ship that has been built in generations. She is now nearly completed and will be delivered to her owner early in the spring and will be seen under sail this summer, an inspiring reminder of the great days of American sail. She is a 125-ton vessel."

The end of the two day stay, Captain Bosshardt said: "We are darn sorry to have to leave North Carolina. California is not the only place with that wonderful climate. North Carolina has its share."

From Southport the White Cloud sailed for Miami. She will probably be there for two weeks, outfitting and taking on supplies. Dr. Rebec may join her there and they will then sail for Panama, via West India ports; thence to California.

Monday night over the Wilmington Y five. The Bolivia girls were good enough last night to nose out Wampee 23 to 22 and they probably will be strong enough to retain their county title this year. Little is known of Leland girls.

At Waccamaw both the boys' and girls' teams were weakened by graduation and it probably will be mid-season before the true strength of the new combinations becomes apparent.

Games have been scheduled for Thursday and Monday nights, and an effort will be made to carry a full report of all games played in The State Port Pilot immediately following each game.

Sailing Schooner Causes Much Interest On Visit

Harbor a little topsail schooner the like of which was beyond the ken of any of those who watched her make sail and get underway. With her salmon-colored topsides set off by a broad black whale on either side, her carved figure-head, her oblong stern and quarter ports and her two square yards, she made the denizens of the water front wonder whether they had been transported back a hundred years and were watching some American privateer slipping out to sea to harry enemy commerce in the war of 1812. The only thing lacking to complete the illusion was a deck crowded with men and the muzzles of guns protruding above the rail cap. But when her head fell off under the pressure of her headsails, and the gilded scroll work of her stern swung into view, showing the name, in simple block letters, "Swift of Ipswich," the watchers knew
