The Rovin' Reporter

(Continued From Page One) spending the day at Shallotte and around there. We are stating this fact, not that we think anybody there missed seeing us, because we missed seeing a lot of good friends down there. The cause: Well, well, we had a bad cold early last week. Then, Superior court opened up and with it came two days of continuous rain. Newspaper work, like a show, must go on. We were out in most of those two days of rain and as a result the cold returned with redoubled force and with it a lot of fever. We were just too sick to get out of town Saturday.

RADAR

Spotted Enemy Targets Through Darkness, Smoke or Fog
The Bell System -
The largest source of Radar for our fighting forces

THIS is not surprising for Radar development and production stems from the same roots that produced and continue to nourish this country's telephone system. Radar, the instrument which enabled our land, sea and air forces to spot enemy targets through darkness, smoke or fog, was one of the outstanding new fighting instruments of the war. Two years before Pearl Harbor the Government asked Bell Telephone Laboratories to put its wide experience and knowledge of electronics to work to help perfect Radar as a military instrument. From then on the Laboratories co-operated closely in the Radar program with the National Defense Research Committee, with Army and Navy specialists, and with scientists of Great Britain. The Western Electric Company, manufacturing branch of the Bell System, became the Nation's largest supplier of Radar systems. One type it made was universally used by B-29's in the Pacific for navigation, target location and high altitude bombing. Another played an important part in aiming the guns on our warships. If you're waiting for a home telephone, it helps a little to know that Radar is one of the reasons. For years telephone manufacturing plants were devoted to war needs.
