glowing account from one of his generals luxurious ever enjoyed. telling of a great victory, wrote across the face of the report this question: "What did you do the next day?"- which is another way of saying that the grist from today's mill will not suffice for tomorrow's needs.

The Seaboard Air Line Railway, along with other American railroads, has been credited with magnificent performance in the recent World War. But that record is now history. This is the "next day" and we are confronted with new opportunities and new responsibilities.

In order to provide our patrons with the finest in transportation, the Seaboard Air Line Railway is intensifying its modernization program, and very soon you will see gliding over Seaboard rails new streamlined trains with ultra-modern coaches and bigger and better motive power. These and other refinements will combine to make Seaboard

Equally great improvements are in prospect for our freight service. Modern equipment, including more powerful and more efficient locomotives, will carry more freight on faster schedules, for the better service of the public.

Rome was not built in a day, and it takes time to build giant locomotives, new cars and other things required in our improvement program. The Seaboard Air Line Railway, however, is known for its pioneering in such matters as air-conditioning, streamlined trains, diesel-electric motive power, etc., and you can count on us to continue "out in front" in the interests of our patrons and friends.
