When Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Frink moved into their handsome new brick home January of last year everything was complete with the exception of a furnace for their central heating plant, so for the balance of the winter and during this past fall they were forced to rely largely upon their fireplace in the living room.

Tony, beautiful white setter who is the pet of the Frink household, soon discovered that a spot just in front of the was easily the best place in the house for comfort, and usually he was planted there. Came the time when the furnace was installed and the fireplace was discontinued the most part, and for a few days Tony was completely at a loss to pick a new spot.

After the lady of the house decided that a false fire-place setting, featuring a warm-
