

SQUARE DANCING

square dances were really going to work up into something big. In fact, they are already big events with people coming from all over North Carolina and many from South Carolina. Joe Keaves and his four-piece string band, an all Brunswick county organization, is proving tops with the brand of string music it provides. In addition to compliments to the band, many of those attending the dances have been heard to declare that Foster Robbins was really finding himself with his work of calling the numbers. With the band clicking as it is with the patrons and with Rob bins going to town, Tomlinson and Watkins say that they hardly plan anything but square dances for awhile. These will be held each Saturday night. In addition to the pavilion and its dances, the Seashore Grill, owned and operated by Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Baucom, is also having regular square dances. The two places are drawing a lot of dance fans to the beach.
