Home Economist To Tour Austria

RALEIGH — A winsome lady who is a specialist in homemaking will leave June 24 for Austria. She is Rosa Lee Armstrong, home economist for Carolina Power & Light Co. in Raleigh.

Miss Armstrong will live for weeks with a family in Klagenfurt, capital of the Austrian province of Carinthia. Then she and her host will tour Austria, visiting Venice, Verona, Innsbruck, Salzburg and possibly Vienna.

The good will ambassador is busy packing sleeping bag, napsack, hiking boots and other gear she will need. She is also brushing up her German. Austria was her first choice, Miss Armstrong says, because the recent treaty giving Austria its first independence in 20 years makes it newsworthy.

Miss Armstrong is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles W. Armstrong of Salisbury. She at-

Bids For Construction Of Homes On Fort Johnson Property Here In Southport Will Be Opened By Army Engineers

The Army Engineers will open bids tomorrow (Thursday) for the construction of three residences for officers families on the Garrison lot here in Southport. All of the structures are to be of one story, but one will be a two-family house.

The double house will be almost opposite the foot of the Engineers wharf that was destroyed by the October storm. Caswell Beach Is Now Nearly Normal

With the exception of four or five small homes, Caswell Beach is back to pre-storm condition. Workmen are now putting the finishing repairs to the home of George Daniels of Goldsboro.

One home that is said to be a total loss is that of the late Bob Powell of Goldsboro. For the development of Caswell Beach Mr. Powell was one of the owners and the sparkplug of the group of Goldsboro men who purchased and still own this beach. Upon the death of Mr. Powell a few years ago development efforts at Caswell slowed down.

Phil King Still Interested Here

Family Moves To Miami, Fla., But Week-End Trip To Long Beach Reveals Continued Local Interest

With both their beautiful home, its furnishings and their novelty store swept away in the October storm, Mr. and Mrs. Phil King, two of the biggest boosters for development at Long Beach, decided to move to Miami, Fla., and start afresh there where they had some interests.

They have purchased a new home and like everything, but they still miss Long Beach, something that they had more or less anticipated. King retained his building lots at Long Beach when the couple left here, and they expressed the hope that they might return to Long Beach some day.

That hope may be realized sooner than was first expected. King came up from Miami this past week end and was amazed at the wonderful rebuilding that has been carried on by a lot of courageous folks. "It is simply wonderful to see the come-back," he said.

He stated he and the family will be back in the fall for at least a visit and that he hoped to be back in the rental and real estate business at Long Beach next spring.

Former Official A Visitor Here

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Sexton of Jacksonville spent Saturday here with Mr. Sexton coming to see Dr. L. G. Brown for a final check-up on the broken arm, an injury that he received here while serving as Brunswick County Welfare Officer, last October.

Sexton resigned as Welfare Officer for Brunswick several months ago to accept a similar position in Onslow. At the office there he has nine workers under him and the salary is higher than that which Brunswick could afford to pay. Incidentally, Sexton says that the work there is much harder.

Jones is alleged to have come along the highway, and opposite the home where the Ruark car was parked his machine left the road, ran through the yard and smashed both itself and the Ruark car.

REVISITED FT. CASWELL. Earl Rothermick of St. Louis, Mo., started service during World War II by being stationed at Fort Caswell in 1942. This week he came back for a visit to Southport and Fort Caswell, accompanied by his wife and two children. The family had never seen the place. In fact, Rothermick did not marry until the war was over. His coming and bringing the family was a result of his pleasant memories of the place.
