The Bolivia business establishment of W. A. Kopp was undergoing expansion; Mrs. Dallas Piggot had supervised the recent Woman's Club musical-social; four new cinderblock homes were being constructed between Southport and Shallotte; Lt. Odell Williamson had received the Oak Leaf Cluster for outstanding performance with his Frence-based infantry outfit; and our editorial writer had opined that Hitler was dead.

It was November 23, 1949, and a shrimp trawler (small) had been gutted by fire in Southport harbor Sunday morning. The Baptist State Convention had established the fact that Ft. Caswell would be a religious retreat; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Willing were in New York; and Cherry McDonald, a horse well-known around town, had again made Not Exactly.

Incidentally, the writer of that column had had quite a day on the telephone lines recently. M. W. Lindner had called The Pilot offices from Long Island, George Rappleyea from New Orleans and L. T. Yaskell from New Jersey. The Rovin' Reporter was mulling over the rumor that a club interested in developing Bald Head Island had been formed in Charlotte; Brunswick County Training School was to field two good basketball squaes; and bird season started tomorrow.

It was November 24, 1954, and the Thompson fuel dock was back in operation. The latest was the third time in thirty years that Mr. Rob had been upset by foul weather, and once again he had rebuilt. Mr. and Mrs. Bryant Potter had claimed for themwere wondering if it were possible . . . Mrs. E. B. Brunson had announced that Christmas Seals were now on sale; Capt. Howard Victor had left for Florida waters; and Capt. A. Martin had purchased the cruiser Jim-Jet in hopes of fishing her the next

The engagement of Alberta Galloway to Robert Willing had been announced; Methodist women of Southport were planning a bazaar; our Not Exactly editor had been sold on mechanization then it comes to dogging holes in the ground; William Warnett had gone dibs on some pogie roe with that same writer; and there were an awful lot of small boats advertised "found" in the
