"What is meant by chlorosis and how can this condition be treated when occurring on azalea plants?"

When azalea leaves lose their normal green color and become yellowish, they are spoken of as being chlorotic. Sometimes the yellowing follows a rather definite pattern with the midrib and veins remaining green and other parts of the surface turning yellow.

This lack of normal leaf color develops as a result of a trace element deficiency and is not associated with a disease organism. These trace element deficiencies are becoming rather wide spread in many crops and bring into focus the importance of proper nutrition.

The most common form of chlorosis on azaleas is caused by the lack of available iron brought about by a soil reaction, pH, which is too high or sweet. The iron deficiency symptom is further aggravated in soils which are wet and poorly aerated.

For correction, the first and most obvious step is to adjust the soil reaction, or pH, by using either aluminum sulphate or sulfur, to a pH of about 5.0. A soil test will be necessary in order to make this adjustment intelligently.

Another method of correcting the chlorotic condition is the use of iron chelate (Key-late). Chelates are made from organic compounds and are considered to be stable and water soluble. They are effective sources of trace element correction in plant nutrition. Mix the iron chelate (Sequestrene) with water according to instruction on the container. The solution can be sprayed on the plant or sprinkled over the plants with a watering can.

While iron chlorosis is the most common deficiency symptom on azaleas in most soils, chlorosis may also appear on plants grown in clay soils due to a deficiency of magnesium. This condition can be corrected by spraying, or sprinkling with one ounce of magnesium sulphate (Epsom salts) in 2 gallons of water.

In answering this question I do not wish to cause confusion because nematodes attacking the root system may also cause a condition resembling iron deficiency chlorosis. In one case the nematode interferes with the absorption of all nutrients while in the other case the soil reaction makes the iron unavailable to the plant.

Claim Drivers Will Benefit

Most North Carolina motorists will benefit financially from the safe driver insurance plan, an insurance industry spokesman testified recently at a public hearing called by Insurance Commissioner Charles F. Gold.

Paul Mize, assistant manager of the North Carolina automobile rate administrative office, discussed in detail the safe driver plan recently submitted to Commissioner Gold by the rate administrative office on behalf of the companies writing automobile liability insurance in the state.

"Out of every 1,000 private passenger car owners, 785 will qualify for the 10 per cent safe driver discount off their premiums because of their good driving record for the previous three years," Mr. Mize stated.

CAPITAL KNOWLEDGE

LOUISIANA

Baton Rouge has the country's tallest State Capitol. It's 34 stories are most unique and reaches almost 500 feet up. Huey P. Long was responsible for the erection of this unique and stately building as it was built during his administration as Governor of the state. The building is something of a personal monument to him, as he was assassinated in a marble-lined corridor of the building in 1935. His grave is in a sunken garden on the Capitol grounds. Over 52,000,000 people have visited the building, which is a visit to remember. The old Capitol, with its winding stairs and dome with panes of colored glass, is also open to the public.
