More Support for Vitamin E

A new study, sponsored by one of the leading natural vitamin companies at Wyoming University indicates that daily supplements of alpha-tocopherol (Vitamin E), when combined with regular aerobic exercise (running), appears to help increase heart and lung endurance. The results proved positive. Heart and lung endurance were increased. Neither Vitamin E supplement nor running, however, proved to be effective when used separately. Only when combined.

The study was undertaken for the purpose of learning whether supplemental ingestion of Vitamin E would assist in developing a high level of cardio-respiratory endurance. The results

Additionally, Dr. J.B. Wood, head of the research team, also found evidence that Vitamin E may be of benefit in the treatment of atherosclerosis.
