

Not enough participation

Adult day care center will close doors Dec. 1

By Marybeth Bianchi
Feature Editor

Brunswick Adult Day Care will close its doors on December 1, following a steady decline in the number of people it served.

"The main reason is a lack of participants," board chairman Joe Carter said Tuesday. "When you have a lack of participants you have a lack of money coming in."

BADC was established in 1990 to serve as an alternative to early placement in a nursing home by providing daytime care and activities for elderly and disabled men and women who were unable to stay at home alone.

The first center was located in Southport. A second was opened in Shallotte in 1991, but closed after less than a year of operation. Carter said during the last month the Shallotte site averaged less than one participant a day.

The Southport site was recently moved to Trinity United Methodist Church and was on the verge of establishing a permanent location, according to Ruth Law of Southport, a volunteer and former board member who struggled to keep BADC alive.

However, Carter pointed out that participation had dropped at the Southport site to an average of three people a day, and after paying Doshier Memorial Hospital for the hot meals there was little money left to run the program and pay the staff, rent and utilities.

"We were just going downhill so fast," Carter said. "Even though we want to provide a service, when it gets down to the nuts and bolts, you still have to operate as a business."

With two full-time and two part-time employees, it cost about $60,000 a year or $150 a day to operate the two centers, Carter said. Because of a funding shortfall, BADC had come to depend on income from participants to keep the service available.

Despite the lack of participants, Carter said Brunswick Adult Day Care did get a lot of support from the community. "We sincerely appreciate the really terrific support we received in the Southport area," he said.

Executive director Jean Marshall agreed.

"There's been a lot of hard workers in the Southport area. It's been wonderful how they pitched in and helped out." She said she is particularly grateful to Trinity United Methodist Church and its members, and Mrs. Law, who was instrumental in getting the program off the ground in Southport.

The only way Brunswick Adult Day Care would have survived, the board chairman said, is if there had been an increase in participation and if the center had a permanent home. He admitted that opening the site in Shallotte may have been a mistake because of a lack of financial backing.

The poor economy was a major contributing factor to the day care center's decline, Marshall observed. And, since the center did not have a permanent location, it was not in a position to compete for grant funding with established programs.

"It's unfortunate we didn't have enough money to sustain us during the crunch we're in," Marshall said. Many of Brunswick Adult Day Care furnishings and supplies will be sold at a liquidation auction on December 5 at Ward Mini-Storage. The money will be used to cover outstanding debts and other remaining financial obligations. Some items have been donated to Hope Harbor Home and Trinity United Methodist Church.

The executive director remains hopeful the adult day care program will not vanish completely after December 1.

"I really see this as an on-going need for this county," she said. "I look for day care to come again. I'm very optimistic."

Manhattan Project: was it a bombshell?

How has the atomic age affected Americans?

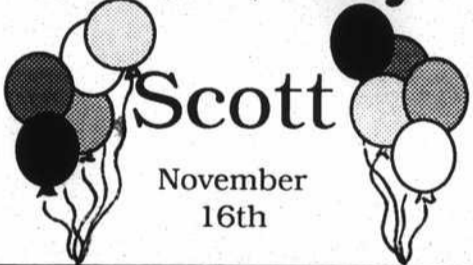

Were movies of the 1950s and 1960s depicting monsters and evil scientists a popular response to the fear of nuclear weapons and radioactive mutation?

On the 50th anniversary of the beginning of the Manhattan Project, professors at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington will explore these ideas during a free public conference examining "The Legacy of Los Alamos: The First 50 Years of the Atomic Age in America". It is scheduled for Monday, November 23, in the Cameron Hall auditorium.

A roundtable discussion on the legacy of Los Alamos will be held at 3 p.m. Participants will be UNC-W chancellor James Leutze, military historian; Dr. Marvin Moss, nuclear physicist; Dr. Ray Dawson, authority on foreign policy and international affairs; Dr. William Jones, scholar of American popular culture of the 1950s; Dr. L. Worth Seagondollar, Manhattan Project participant.

A lecture at 7:30 p.m. by Jones will focus on "Nuclear Images in Popular Culture" and include the film "The Atomic Cafe".
