Wedding reports

The State Port Pilot has adopted new guidelines for the publication of wedding reports.

"The newspaper has never charged for the publication of wedding stories or wedding photos and will continue to offer the service free of charge," editor Ed Harper said. "But such reports will be subject to stricter editing to emphasize the local relevance of the event."

Harper said this means some portions of a wedding report will no longer be included in articles published free. Those who want to assure that a complete wedding report is printed will be offered the opportunity to purchase space on a per-inch basis.

The editor also addressed the matter of outdated wedding reports.

"In order for a wedding report to be considered for free publication it must be submitted to the newspaper no more than 21 days after the event," Harper said. "Those not meeting this deadline will be offered the opportunity to purchase space for the publication of an edited or complete report, whichever they choose."

Group resolves to lose weight

A new year often means a resolution to shed those extra pounds which have been adding up over the years.

A support group is being formed to address the issues of weight loss, nutrition and body image. It is sponsored by Nutritional Health Services and led by Rita Miller, a licensed nutritionist.

Two free introductory classes will be held on Wednesday, January 6, at 10 a.m. at Trinity United Methodist Church in Southport and at 7 p.m. at Dorothy Essey Red Carpet Realty in Long Beach.
