

Spots are the center of attention these days for both commercial netters, who back up to the beach to set their nets, and recreational fishermen who haul their nets out from the beach by hand. Spots are also providing great times for anglers both in boats, on the beaches and on the Oak Island piers.

Cape Fear fishing

By Jim Harper
Staff Writer

The spotlight is still guess where on the angling scene.

Spots continue to please hook-and-liners (as they do netters) on the ocean beaches, in the Cape Fear and Lockwood Folly rivers, and on the Oak Island piers.

Large concentrations of the fish are still to be found on the Pigfish Ground and in the west bend of the Cape Fear near the Coast Guard channel, as well as in the deep channel of Lockwood Folly near the Intracoastal Waterway.

Bloodworms are still the bait of choice, though Jimmy Price reported from Wildlife Bait and Tackle that he is recommending a combination of bloodworms and cut bait, especially on the Pigfish Ground, to give a chance for gray trout as well.

"And they're catching grays in 22 to 26 feet of water," Price said.

Price reported that he'd had an exceptional weekend with speckled trout, with catches ranging from 11 to 21 fish and including puppy drum and flounder.

Most of the specks were taken on grubs in Walden Creek, Price said.

Price said that David Mammay had flounder weighing up to nine pounds for a party which fished live bait Thursday in Lockwood Folly Inlet.

At Sure Catch Tackle, Nelson Cobble reported excellent kingfish catches at the Horseshoe, including a 32-pounder taken Sunday aboard the Reel M Ocean by Thomas Smith and a 35-pounder landed the same day by Jay Jordan.

Sally Green at Yaupon Pier said spots bit very well over the weekend, and said Tuesday that her anglers were doing well on flounder. She said two kings weighing 13 and 24 pounds were decked Friday.

At Ocean Crest Pier, Carl Collins reported good spot fishing, as well as good fishing for drum, flounder and blues.

Dave Beckner at Long Beach Pier said flounder, puppy drum and spots were biting well.

Winners of the recent Kids Fishing Day sponsored by Brunswick County Bassmasters have been announced. Winners in the 0-7 Age Group were: first, Amanda Osborn; second, Joshua Hagewood. Winners in the 8-15 age group were: first, Justin Hagewood; second, Chris Adams.
