A Sad Death.

On last Tuesday at 12.30 o'clock Mr. Rossie Craven died at the home of his sister Mrs. J. L. Cagle 623 South Ashe Street Greensboro N.C. December 30, 1909, of typhoid pneumonia.

The deceased was about 23 years of age and the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Craven of Rameur N. C. R. F. D. 1 who were at his bedside when the end came.

He is survived by his parents three brothers and five sisters as follows: Messers T. A. W. C. and Artemas Craven Mrs. W. D. Thornburg, Mrs. Lewis Hinshaw, Mrs. J. L. Cagle, Mrs. H. P. Moffitt and Miss Cora Craven.

The remains were taken for burial to Holy Springs church Randolph county and the interment was made Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. Craven was deaf and dumb and a graduate of Morgantown deaf and dumb high school.

He was sick only about two weeks and bore his sickness very patiently. Rossie was a noble and kind hearted young man loved by all who knew him, had many friends who will be sorry to know of his death.

Our sympathy is extended to the bereaved family. While we know it is hard to part with our loved ones yet we feel that our loss is his eternal gain.

We know that he can't come back to us, let us strive to meet him in a better world where there will be no more parting.

The Wars of Our Country.

XLI.—Civil War—Grant Takes Charge.

By Albert Payson Trehune

HE was General U. S. Grant. Less than four years earlier he had been plodding along in an Illinois town as an $800 a year store clerk and had been looked on as a failure in life.

He had been busy smashing the Confederacy's power in the southwest while more showy Union leaders had been suffering endless setbacks at the hands of Lee in Virginia.

His first move was to divide all the Union forces into several armies and, with a mathematical plan of action in mind, to hurl each of these at one of the various armies of the Confederacy. It was a general organized rush all along the line. Grant himself, with the Army of the Potomac, chose as his adversary the Army of Northern Virginia, Lee's own crack veterans. In pursuance of this idea he crossed the Rapidan and began a march on Richmond.

Having crossed the Rapidan, the Army of the Potomac moved toward Richmond, its advance forcing Lee to leave a strong defensive position and hurry to check the invasion. The two forces met on May 4 in a barren, desolate tract of swamps and scrub oaks known as "the Wilderness." There for three days the battle waged, about 250,000 men in all being engaged in the struggle. On May 7 the Confederates fell back toward Richmond, and Grant pressed on in hot pursuit. The southerners halted near Spotsylvania Court House, and the battle was renewed. Lee there held his ground. But where Grant was barred in his direct march to Richmond he immediately tried to advance at some other point. Each setback merely strengthened his determination to push on. He had planned his general route and would not be turned aside. He wrote: "We have now ended the sixth day of very heavy fighting. The result to this time is very much in our favor. Our losses have been heavy as well as those of the enemy. I think the loss of the enemy must be greater. We have taken over 5,000 prisoners in battle, while he has taken from us few except stragglers."

"I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer."

In the first month of this whirlwind campaign Grant lost 33,250 men to about 30,000 of Lee's. The bloodshed was the greater because Grant found in Lee a foe almost worthy of his own martial genius.

Falling to dislodge Lee at Spotsylvania, Grant moved hurriedly to the southern side of the James river and marched toward Richmond by way of Petersburg. At the latter place, about twenty miles south of the Confederate capital, Lee again opposed his progress. Petersburg was strongly fortified. It was the key to Richmond and must fall before the capital could be taken. So Grant, unable to carry Lee's fortifications by storm, hid siege to the place, sending out expeditions of cavalry to cut off the enemy's supplies and railway communication.

While Grant and Lee were face to face at Petersburg momentous campaigns were in progress elsewhere.

Lee sent 20,000 men under General Early to capture Washington. Early, crossing the Potomac, outnumbered and defeated a Union force sent to check him. Part of his army invaded Pennsylvania, burning Chambersburg, but was driven back. The main body pressed on through Maryland toward Baltimore and Washington until his progress was checked by General Lew Wallace and some hastily assembled regiments. Wallace was defeated after a stubborn seven hour battle on the Monocacy river, but his resistance perhaps saved the Union capital from capture, for, laden with plunder, the Confederates started back to Virginia.

Meanwhile Grant, learning of Lee's move, sent General Sheridan in pursuit of Early. Sheridan caught up with and defeated the Confederates at Winchester, in the Shenandoah valley. Sept. 10 and again on Sept. 22. In a week he had sent Early's battered troops hurrying southward. But on Oct. 19, while Sheridan was away, the Federal army was attacked and beaten by Early at Cedar Creek. Sheridan rode up in time to rally his troops, charge the Confederate line and for the third time to win an overwhelming victory. Early's army was wrecked and the Shenandoah valley cleared of Confederates.

North Carolina Library Bulletin.

The first number of North Carolina Library Bulletin, issued by the Library Commission, has been received. The Bulletin, an attractive pamphlet of ten pages, is of interest to all who are working for the educational advancement of North Carolina as well as to librarians. The purpose of the Bulletin is to disseminate general library information and to bring the libraries of the state into closer relation with the Commission and with one another.

An article entitled "The North Carolina Library Commission" sets forth in detail the activities of the Commission. Briefly, the work of the Commission is to furnish statistics concerning the libraries and librarians of the state; to assist in the organization and re-organization of libraries; to give advice to towns concerning the awakening of local interest and establishment of local libraries; to prepare or revise book lists for individual libraries; to give instruction to librarians and to library assistants in modern library methods; and to publish a bulletin of general library information.

Other interesting articles are "The New Library Building at Davidson College" by Miss Cornelia Shaw, and "The Missionary Collection in the Carnegie Library of Charlotte" by Miss Annie Smith Ross, the librarian. A valuable list of one hundred books is given under the caption "Best Books of 1908."

The Bulletin will be issued quarterly and mailed free to all libraries in the state. It will be sent to library trustees and to other persons interested making due application therefor.
