Died Yesterday Interesting Items From Here and There Briefly Told

The State of North Carolina is one that needs to reduce the biggest sort of a hole in this discreditable record the past ten years and we want to put it all to the bad within the next ten years.

Schools are the greatest assets any city can boast, any county any state. The public school is the greatest leveler of the high start and it is where the great majority of them end—so there is the greatest need of the public school being made modern and efficient. It must do the great portion of the educational work of our school system.

Acknowledging these facts is it not absolutely necessary that we build and maintain the best of public schools? As a business proposition are not the schools—the public schools, more than worth the cost?

If a majority of our boys and girls, the future citizenship of the community, start there and also end there, is it not a fact that about the best investment any town, county or state can make is the public schools?

Recognizing these facts is it not necessary that every city county and state look carefully and honestly into the exact stand-ing and condition of the public schools and set to work to that point where they will be most efficient and most helpful?

One victory helps to another. The accomplishment of one task leads to the accomplishment of another. One thing done well inspires for the doing of another.—Salisbury Evening Post.

PROF. O. C. HAMILTON

A Sketch of His Character and Useful Life

(Note.—It gives us great pleasure to publish the following fine appreciation of the character and service of Professor O. C. Hamilton. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Spinks Hamilton, of New Hope township, Randolph county, His father and mother both died some 25 or 30 years ago. He taught many years at Palmerville in Stanley county, near the Narrowsthe town of Baden which is being built by the Southern Aluminum Company. None but a real student of his could have written so just an appreciation tribute to his character work and method as the following by Dr. Sykes.—Editor.)

decretain ideas, and he drove them home.

"There are no Alps," said Napoleon. How often these words were heard in that brief morning "lecture" which was a characteristic of his teaching! Many a green country boy heard of Napoleon for the first time in this way. The writer through thirty years still remembers wondering where were the Alps, That phrase was the key note to one of the great purposes of Prof. Hamilton. Failure had no place in his vocabulary. He made a boy feel that he could accomplish any task. He made the boy willing to undertake the task. Now, the boys that went to him needed this very spur. The good professor may have often realized the boy's limitations, but never for a moment did he let the boy know it. He kindled this fire in the heart of a boy at the right time. The boy needed a vision and self confidence. From the well-re-
