The Temperamental Boob

By H. B. KNIGHT

(Copyright, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Yep, that's right; I want to see the editor in chief of the Courier, and want to see him quick!"

To the utter amazement of the little boy in knickerbockers who sat in the hallway leading to the editorial office of the giant publishing house a tall and lean visitor, with a general dapper appearance, made the above remark in an indifferent and even bored sort of tone.

In a second the office boy was on his feet, and not carelessly leaning back in his chair, with his feet upon the much worn and misused, varnish-scratched table, as though his only concern and ambition were to shirk and kill time.

"Your card, please," respectfully said the friendly somniferous.

The visitor's name was Bill. He was soon enlightened by a sharp, stinging rap on the skin-thick sides of his cheeks. His eyebrows shrilled vanished. The blood no longer tingled in his intemperate insurrection in his veins; it boiled in a mad passion at his indulgence in allowing himself to doze away and thus bring him into the clutches of the law.

He endeavored to collect his senses and try and elude dress at the hands of the being who disturbed his nap. He stretched himself and yawned for time. Something flapped poignantly against his nose, fluttered with the wind in his eyes. Slowly he opened his sleepy organs of vision, wondering what it might be. The sunlight was very strong, but he succeeded in making out an inscription—it was his name.

He had to blink several times before he could really see, for O' Sol's candelabra hurt his somniferous sight. Now he grasped the paper in his hands and read it in a spell-bound, increditing wonder and astonishment. Evidently he did not believe what he saw, for he rubbed his eyes and pinched himself to ascertain that he was not "seeing things" in a seance.

Another sharp wallop greeted his surprise. He turned up his eyes to the unknown bystander, who held up his feet.

"Wake up, sleepy poet—I've decided to take you back. I guess I was wrong."

His surprise was even greater when he discovered that the imaginary minion was his stubborn and bigoted father, who always loved to have his own way. His heart beat loud for joy when he beheld the second person. He wished to speak, but his tongue became paralyzed. "Darling" was all he could say.

The girl's buxom countenance became suffused in red. She attempted to hide her deep emotion by saying:

"The Courier will publish in book form the 'scripts—the, er, very personal and friendly verses that you wrote to me from the time we were little children."

"They are your property," interposed honest Bill.

"No, they're yours," argued the just girl; "you wrote them. And this is the initial check for one thousand. The company is famous for its work. The provisions for royalties that I have made will be faithfully carried out."

"And," continued the youth, huskily, "you remember, when I should make good—you remember the old contract—will it be carried out, Marjorie?"

The girl could no longer control her emotions.

"It will," she said, in a moved voice, and buried her blush in the boy's arms, even if it was broad daylight and the hundreds who tumbled Times square did laudably look upon them.

Pigeons May Come Back

When they hear the current report that a member of the Connecticut state game commission has seen several passenger pigeons, persons who know the story of bird life in North America are placed as judged as if he had said he had seen a passenger pigeon. There is a century ago it was the most plentiful game bird on the continent. It is now a passenger pigeon as it were, and its presence is a thing that has almost become a legend. It is said to have darkened the landscape like a cloud passing beneath the sun. This same 1871 census, when one million and a half of them were seen over a million square miles of territory, their disappearance would be a true return of the native, and would be a strictly welcome.

In Loving Memory

Monday January 20, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Foster and took their son, Irvin, aged 16 years. Death was due to pneumonia. All was done that loving friends and physicians could do. It was God's will to take him and may it serve as a tie that will bind our hearts nearer to God and may it be an unbroken home around the throne of God.

His remains were laid to rest in the M. E. cemetery January 21. Surviving him are his parents, three brothers and two sisters.

President To Start Sunday for Home

President Wilson will sail from Brest, France, for New York, February 18.

Evidence of President Wilson's intention not to abandon the Peace Conference upon the ratification of the treaty of Versailles, it is found in the executive Tuesday that he plans to return from Washington to Paris by March 15.
