

HORNET HUNTED

The following are the words in which Woodrow Wilson spoke to the naval officers of the Atlantic fleet on August 11, 1917. No speech by any American statesman ever compared with this speech in audacity. For Mr. Wilson had a passion for peace—and he then believed that the hornets that would strive to destroy his vision of justice and democracy were to be found in the depths of the high seas—not within the borders of the Republic.

"We are hunting hornets all over the farm and letting the nest alone. None of us know how to go to the nest and crush it, and yet I despair of hunting for hornets all over the sea when I know where the nest is, and know that the nest is breeding hornets as fast as I can find them. I am willing for my part, and I know you are willing because I know the stuff you are made of—I am willing a sacrifice half the navy Great Britain and we together have to crush that nest, because if we crush it, the war is won."

The following are the words in which Mr. Tumulty, on Thursday, at Bethesda, drew for us the picture of Woodrow Wilson, as he was at the time he made the speech above quoted, and as he is today. They may be read with profit by those enemies of Mr. Wilson who have the loudest cries: "Away with this man, away with him from our midst," for they furnish very concrete evidence both of the gratitude with which from time immemorial republics have richly rewarded the man who would serve his fellow man; and the sinister ability of that nest of home bred hornets—the nation's cynics, little-mindedness and enmity that have pursued Mr. Wilson through his eight years of service—to get in their maiming, deadly work of the greatest force for public good in all the world of the present time.

"Two pictures are in my mind. First the Hall of Representatives crowded from floor to gallery with expectant throngs. Presently it is announced that the President of the United States will address Congress. There steps out to the speaker's desk a straight, vigorous, slender man, active and alert. He is 60 years of age, but he looks not more than 45, so lithe of limb, so alert of bearing, so virile. It is Woodrow Wilson reading his great war message.

"The other picture is only three and a half years later. There is a parade of veterans of the great war. They are to be reviewed by the President on the east terrace of the White House. In a chair sits a man, your President, broken in health, but still alert in mind. His hair is white, his shoulders bowed, his figure bent. He is 63 years old but he looks older. It is Woodrow Wilson.

"Presently, in the procession, there appears an ambulance laden with the wounded soldiers, the maimed, the halt and the blind. As they pass they salute, slowly, reverently. The Presdent's right hand goes up in answering salute. I glanced at him. There were tears in his eyes. The wounded are greeting the wounded; those in the ambulance, he in the chair, are alike casualties of the great war.

"I don't believe that in his heart President Wilson regrets his wounds. I fancy he realizes that no man could die in a greater cause, but I do sometimes wonder if it ever seems to him strange that when a man has been seriously wounded in his country's services he should be met with sneers and calumnies from his countrymen.

"I think already the better nature of America is awakening. Those who have joined in the chorus of calumnies begin to grow ashamed of their unchivalrous conduct, begin to resent the tricks of politicians which beguiled them into base ingratitude.

"Woodrow Wilson will presently make his exit from the political stage. I am human enough, and all the Irish are very human, to want him to live many years, not only for the sake of his personal friends and the great books which he is going to write, but also to see the vindication which is sure to come.

"I saw him firmly hold our nation in neutrality in most trying circumstances of the World War. I know how his heart flamed against the outrages which Germany was committing but he knew the responsibilities of his office, and he knew better than any one else that the general mind of America was not prepared for war. He hoped even against hope that the United States might be able to serve the cause of justice and democracy as a mediator between the contenders. At last came the direct challenge from Germany, the announcement, in direct violation of solemn pledges, of an unrestricted submarine warfare.

"On April 6, 1917, President Wilson rode to the Capitol and read, amid wild cheers from the floor and galleries, the great war message, one of the immortal documents of history, which will continue to be read through ages, read as long as the English language remains a living tongue. It will be read so long as men love liberty, have faith in justice, and respect human rights.

"On that fateful day I rode with him back from the Capitol to the White House, the echo of the applause still ringing in my ears. For a while he sat silent and pale in the Cabinet Room. At last he said: 'Think what it was they were applauding. It means death for our young men. How strange it seems to applaud that.'

"My friends, that simple remark is one key to an understanding of Woodrow Wilson. All politicians pretend to hate and dread war, but Woodrow Wilson really hates and dreads it in all of the fibres of his human soul, hates and dreads it because he has an imagination and a heart, an imagination which shows his sensitive perception of the anguish and the dying which war entails, a heart which yearns and aches over every dying soldier and beads aches with each new made wound.

"I recall a little incident at Sea Girt. A journalist had written him up and we wanted him to do one of the little stunts that the public dearly loves to read about. He said to me 'Tumulty you must realize that I am not built for these things. I do not want to be displayed before the public. If I tried to do it I would do it badly. I want people to love me, but they never will. I have never forgotten the wistful tones in which he spoke those last four words, 'But they never will.'

"This lonely man is lonely not because he disdains love. He craves it with all his soul. He is lonely because of his genius. The greatest genius always walks companionless. We all love the stories of Lincoln, the companionable, the easy-going, the fam-

WICKER-WALL

A pretty home wedding was solemnized on Wednesday evening, November 17, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Wall at Ellerbe, when their daughter, Mary Cornelia, became the bride of Daniel Luther Wicker, of Rockingham.

The house was artistically decorated in long leaf pine and flowers. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Dallas, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Rockingham, before an improvised altar of long leaf pine and chrysanthemums.

The wedding music was rendered by Miss Nettie Ward, of Asheboro.

Promptly at 7:30 o'clock, Miss Annie Marks, of Rockingham, sang: "I Love You Truly." At the first strains of the wedding march from Lohengrin the maid of honor, Miss Honolulu Farlow, gowned in black baronet satin, entered the parlor carrying a bouquet of pink roses. Little Clemantine Farlow, as ring bearer, entered carrying the ring in a white chrysanthemum, followed by little Lucile Wall, who scattered flowers in the bride's parway. The bride entered with her father and was met before the altar by the groom and his best man, Dr. J. H. Ellerbe, of Rockingham.

The bride was lovely in a blue suit of navy blue tricotine with accessories to match and carrying a shower bouquet of bride's roses, lilies of the valley and orchids.

Mr. and Mrs. Wicker left immediately after the ceremony for Jacksonville, Florida. They will be at home after November 24th in Rockingham.

The popularity of the young couple was proven by the many beautiful gifts.

How I Became My Own Grandfather

I married a widow who had a daughter. My father visited our house frequently, fell in love with my step-daughter and married her. Thus my father became my son-in-law, and my step-daughter my mother, because she was my father's wife. My step-daughter had also a son; he was of course, my brother and at the same time my grandchild, for he was the son of my daughter.

My wife was my grandmother, because she was my mother's mother, I was my wife's husband and grandchild at the same time, and as the husband of a person's grandmother is his grandfather, I became my own grandfather.—The Review.

Lincoln's life, character and career, knows that he was the loneliest man of his age. He had not one single confidant, not one single intimate companion. Sadness is written in his face.

"So it is with Woodrow Wilson. He would love to feel the familiar touch of the ordinary camaraderie of life, but it cannot be so. The knowledge that it cannot be saddened him from the outset. "It is known to his nearest friends, but not guessed at by the public at large, that this aggressive fighting man is in his own nature a very shy man, too sincere to pose, too shy to make advances. He has not been generally understood. People see his dignity, his reserve, but they cannot see his great heart yearning for the love of their fellowmen. Out of that great loving heart of his has come this passion, which has controlled his whole public career his passion for justice and his passion for fair dealing and democracy."

"Woodrow Wilson lacks by temperament the hail-fellow-well-met, slap-you-on-the-back, easy familiarity. It is often one of the superficial aspects of democracy, attractive when it is sincere, but at best only an outward sign.

"Real democracy lies deep in men's souls. In Woodrow Wilson's inmost heart there burns like a holy fire a passion and a conviction that the democratic ideal is right, the ideal of equal opportunity for all, not only the eyes of God, but here on earth in all the processes of government and not only among individuals, but among nations, an intolerance of privileges and exemptions as an abomination and betrayal of the purposes for which the government of the United States was founded, and a determination with all the iron will that is in him to live for and fight for and, if necessary, die for this principle."

Bank Vice-President

Tells How Ziron Iron Tonic Helped His Daughter After Operation for Appendicitis.

AFTER any serious illness, the first thing you notice when you begin to get around is your lack of strength and energy—a tired, weak feeling. The sooner you get your strength back the better. The thing to do is to eat plenty of good, nourishing food, get all the fresh air you can, exercise conservatively, and take Ziron Iron Tonic three times a day. Your doctor will tell you this is sound advice, and urge you to follow it.

Read this letter from Mr. J. B. Kelly, vice-president of the First National Bank, Graceville, Fla.: "My daughter had been in bad health since last April. She was operated on for appendicitis. She has been taking Ziron for two weeks. Her appetite is better than it has been. Her nerves are better, and she says she feels better. . . . I know that Ziron is good for weak and feeble people." Ziron is a scientific, reconstructive tonic, prepared from valuable strength-building ingredients, for weak people with thin blood. Druggists sell Ziron on a money-back guarantee. Try it.
