SOME THINGS WE ARE DOING

A good deal is being said nowadays about the progress North Carolina has been, and is, making along educational lines.

And yet a great many citizens, while knowing in a general way that something worth while is going on, would be at a loss to answer if asked to state in definite terms just what the state is accomplishing in school matters.

The "Know North Carolina" movement should include due attention to facts regarding our schools.

Dr. E. C. Brooks, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, thus summarizes in an article in the Educational Edition of the Raleigh News and Observer some of our school achievements:

"1. The school term has been increased from about five months to about seven months.

"2. The value of the school property will be increased from about $15,000,000 to about $40,000,000, when the present bond issues already voted have been spent.

"3. The qualification of the teachers has materially increased. Five years ago less than 40 per cent of the teachers had the equivalent of high school education, while today about 65 per cent have either high school or college training.

"4. The number of high schools have multiplied so that the number of children attending has increased from about 10,000 to about 45,000, and through the aid of the state every county will have at least one good four year high school. Five years ago thirty counties did not have a single standard high school and eighty-five had none for the rural districts. It is the aim to carry a good high school to the boys and girls of every township and provide such instruction as will be helpful to the pupils and to the patrons of the community."

That is a record of which the state has every reason to be proud. But it does not attempt to tell the whole story.

Did you ever stop to think, for instance, how far the school consolidation movement has gone in North Carolina?

Have you ever realized to what extent the transportation of children to and from schools is being carried in the rural districts of various counties?

A gentleman from another state who was here recently was talking of what was being done in his state along these lines on the assumption that the proposition was entirely new to North Carolina.

And it turned out that North Carolina is already doing far more along these lines than his own state.

Yet some North Carolinians in the group with whom he was talking did not know there was such a thing in their own state as rural school transportation of pupils.

North Carolina, as we have said, is doing much more along educational lines than many of us realize.

But she is not yet doing enough to justify an attitude of complacency with reference to her achievements.

There is a great deal more yet to be done before her educational record is in entire keeping with her wealth and her wonderful natural resources.

12,000 Quarts Whiskey Destroyed

Double precaution was taken by a federal marshal and a squad of deputies in New York last week when they destroyed more than 12,000 quarts of Scotch whiskey. The whiskey was ordered to be poured down a sink, as was ordered by the court, and the marshal asked permission to add kerosene oil with it as the bottles were broken. The whiskey was seized on the schooner at the run from the Bahamas.
