WASHINGTON LETTER

Washington, March 26. This is the season for propaganda and trial balloons to find the right man in the Democratic party for presidential candidate and to kill off the nomination of President Harding for what some Republicans consider a better candidate in their own party.

There is a well defined movement among what is known as recalcitrant Republican leaders to prevent the re-nomination of President Harding. What the magnitude and strength of this movement amount to, can not yet be gauged.

Borah has privately expressed his conviction to friends that the President can not again be elected and if nominated, his candidacy will completely disrupt the party.

The friends of the President will make a desperate effort to whomp it up for him, and they are banking a good deal on the hope that men like Borah, Johnson and LaFollette can get together.

Among Democratic candidates the fighting stage has no where been reached. Some Democratic leaders, however, though they will not admit it, are becoming exercised a slight bit over the activities of Henry Ford and his friends.

What some think may happen if Ford is defeated, he may have gathered enough strength from both parties to start a third party.

Underwood is being used by the reactionary element to capture the trend now seen to be setting towards the Democrats. Big business which expects a Democratic victim in 1924, wants him, and it is to be observed at this moment that strong Republican papers are booming him.

FIELD OF HIGH GRADE COAL IN NORTH CAROLINA NEAR THE ATLANTIC COAST

Fifteen Million Tons Located. The U. S. Geological Survey has issued a report of a survey of a part of the Deep River coal fields made by the U. S. Geological and the N. C. Geological survey giving a clear statement of the Cumcock Glendon area of the Deep River coal fields.

These figures are the result of a recent examination made by Dr. Marius R. Campbell under the joint auspices of the United States Geological Survey, Department of the Interior, and the North Carolina State Geological Survey.

The coal bed is remarkably regular in thickness and composition. It contains no partings, but in places a narrow band of bony coal occurs at the bottom of the bed.

The coal is moderately low in ash, probably not averaging more than 8 per cent and as shown where it is cut by dikes, will make good coke.

The coal is moderately low in ash, probably not averaging more than 8 per cent and as shown where it is cut by dikes, will make good coke. It would make an excellent domestic fuel if its cleavage were not so highly developed that when it is mined most of it breaks up into small fragments.
