A TRIBUTE TO WOODROW WILSON

(By Mrs. I. W. Phillips.)
Last Sunday near the noon hour of an almost perfect day, the spirit of Woodrow Wilson took its everlasting flight into the great beyond. His was a tired and wounded spirit and no doubt death was a welcome release. It was indeed fitting that the soul of the man whose life for the last three years had been so quiet and serene should pass away on such a day. A beautiful life has gone out and has entered into one more beautiful and sublime of which this was only a shadow. He has entered into the rest he so richly deserved. Oh, how our hearts were grieved at the sad news of his death. Although we were expecting it, it came as a distinct blow, for we had hoped against hope that there might be a chance for the better. But alas, it was not to be. The grim messenger of death came and he must go. Our hearts go out in profound sympathy to Mrs. Wilson and others closely connected in this their sore bereavement.

Ever since he came into public view we have had an intense desire to see him, to clasp his hand and look into his kindly eyes, and to express our appreciation of his great services to the world. The result of which only the ages will tell.

Mr. Wilson, a man of great intellectual power and superior qualities of heart and mind; and can rightly be classed as the greatest man America has ever produced without exceptions. In the words of Cordell Hull we are of the opinion that the world will look in vain for his equal. Doubtless some think he failed in his efforts for world peace, but it was only a temporary failure and we shall not let such thoughts delude us, although he was not destined to live to see the results of his efforts, some of us perhaps will, and generations yet unborn will bless his memory. He sowed the seed, others will reap the harvest. As Christ died that we might live and his kingdom over all the earth prevail, so Woodrow Wilson died that his principles might live and take deeper root in the hearts of the people in this and other lands. Their lives were on somewhat similar lines, as they both held up to the world the principles of the brotherhood of man. They could not have lived and died in vain.

FIFTEEN PERSONS DEAD WHEN GAS EXPLODES

When some dynamite, which was stored in the cellar of a two family house in Pawtucket, R. I., exploded fifteen inmates of the house were killed. It is thought that some died of asphyxiation before the explosion. When one child awakened and discovered the odor of gas, the father went to investigate, sending the mother and sisters out of the house. They escaped death, but were badly cut and bruised. The man was a wood-cutter and had the dynamite to use in his work.
