A Kindly Hand.

(From The Winston-Salem Journal.) Mothers' Aid, made possible by the General Assembly of 1923, has been administered in North Carolina since July 1, 1923. Since that time 130 women in 48 counties in the State have received this assistance. Through this aid, these women have been given encouragement and assistance in getting profitable work, in establishing respectable homes, in keeping their children in school, and in many other ways leading to general improvement of their living conditions.

IF WASHINGTON COULD VISIT US NOW

(From The Wilmington Star.) Looking backward instead of forward, Wilmington may get a better perspective than some of her pessimists seem to possess. Take, for instance, the view of the small beginnings of this town in The Journal of George Washington's visit here in 1791. The population is given by a defective census was 1,000 souls. Say an actual count would have shown twice that number, there were not enough all told to build up a picture of the Wilmington of today.

Folks who are worried about depth of water and the amount of commerce at this port, would do well to read Washington's words about the mud bank with only 10 feet of water and passing vessels, with only 250 tons. Then go down to the river and look at some of the marine monsters which find it possible as well as profitable to come to Wilmington.
