EVERETT SPEAKS ON STATE ISSUES

Secretary of State Makes Interesting Address At Asheboro On Party's Achievements.

Hon. W. N. Everett, Secretary of State of North Carolina, made a short but interesting address in the court house in Asheboro Saturday afternoon to an interested audience. Mr. Everett was introduced by Congressman William C. Hammer, who made a short talk on national issues.

Mr. Everett in his address confined himself to a short discussion of state politics. He declared that the Democratic party had been building up the state of North Carolina for the past quarter of a century on the foundation of public education, health, good roads, and public welfare, and quoted figures to substantiate the record.

The speaker, in referring to the Democratic record in school matters, stated that North Carolina last year spent twenty-seven millions of dollars on schools. There is being spent in North Carolina this year, according to Mr. Everett, twenty-five millions of dollars on consolidated schools; two years from now the State will be spending sixty-five times as much on the school system than was being spent under the administration of the great Chas. B. Aycock.

In the matter of road building and revenue for the paying for the roads, he called attention to the fact that when the six-fifty million dollar bond issue is spent the state will have 4,000 miles of hard surface roads and roads of other substantial construction. In addition there are in the state a thousand miles of good roads that have not cost the state a cent. Mr. Everett stressed the point that the Democratic party intended to carry out its pledges for the construction of good roads to the letter, and in line with this intention must build the road from Pittsboro to Asheboro. He pointed out that the state last year collected more than eight millions of dollars from automobiles and gasoline tax, every dollar of which is being used for the paying off road bonds and maintenance of the highways. A million and a half of this amount was deposited as a sinking fund to retire the bonds as they fall due. This year the state department anticipates a revenue of $10,000,000 from automobile and gasoline taxes. These roads are being constructed and paid for without taking one cent of state tax from the pockets of the people of North Carolina. The entire country is amazed at the progress the state has been making in road building and in the manner in which they are being paid for without taxing the people.

Turning his attention to health matter, the speaker stated that North Carolina last year spent $300,000 in the interest of the health of the people of the state, chiefly in the prevention of disease. As a consequence the death rate has been reduced to the lowest, and babies have a better chance to grow up to manhood and womanhood than in any other state in the union.

Mr. Everett stressed the fact that in the matter of taxation the Democratic party has always dealt fairly with the people of the state. As the activities of the state government witness and enlarge, of course, more money is needed, but notwithstanding this two million people in the state pay no tax for state purposes. This two million pays no interest on state bonds, except on road bonds and this is paid by those who drive automobiles and use the good roads.

The speaker defended the exemption of foreign stocks from taxation, arguing that a tax on the physical value of the property and a tax on the stock would be double taxation. He illustrated his point by showing that a double taxation would be like taxing a man's farm on its value as appraised and then paying a tax also on the value named on the deed to the property. In his opinion this exemption of foreign stocks from taxation will increase the number of manufacturing plants in the state, and also the number of retired wealthy business men who will make their home in the state. This will mean not only more manufacturing plants, but also many thousands of dollars these wealthy men will spend in the state and will mean a source of revenue to the state in the way of inheritance taxes.

Mr. Everett, although not entirely recovered from a recent illness, spoke distinctly and convincingly and held the attention of the audience from the beginning of his speech to the end.

On account of the inclement weather conditions his audience was not large. The speaking had been arranged earlier for the people living in the country and the bad weather kept many at home who would otherwise have been at the speaking.

FARLOW MILLIKAN AND BULLA FAMILIES TO HOLD REUNION

On the first Sunday in October the annual reunion of the Farlow, Millikan and Bulla families will be celebrated on the old Millikan farm, home of the late Benjamin Millikan, one time sheriff of Randolph county. Over 100 years ago these three families settled in the middle section of Randolph county. The Farlow neighborhood extended several miles, from old Trinity south, then the Millikans for several miles reaching down toward Asheboro and the Bulla neighborhood.

These three families have carried into each other until they have become almost like one large family, and for three years they have had a reunion on the old Millikan farm. The reunion is attended by large crowds. A picnic dinner is the feature of the day. This year several relatives from other parts of the state are expected to attend.

DR. PEACOCK CAPTURED IN EL CAJON, CALIFORNIA

Warden Busbee Makes Arrest--Peacock Will Fight Extradition--Says He Is Sane.

Dr. J. W. Peacock, who murdered Chief of Police Taylor of Thomasville in April, 1921, and who escaped from the criminal insane ward of the state prison at Raleigh August 30th, 1922, has been captured at El Cajon, California, after a long search. Warden Samuel Busbee made the arrest. Dr. Peacock has announced his intention of fighting extradition on the grounds that he has been declared sane by a Florida court.

About two weeks ago Superintendent George Ross Pou, of the State prison, received information that Dr. Peacock was in El Cajon, Cal., practicing medicine, and living with his family. Governor Morrison issued extradition papers on the governor of California and named Warden Busbee as agent. Attorney General Manning will be sent to California to take care of North Carolina's legal interests in the matter of extradition.

The escape of Dr. Peacock has caused considerable criticism of the state prison officials. Many people were charging that no effort was being made to apprehend the prisoner. However, Superintendent Pou's statement shows clearly that he has been leaving no stones unturned in trying to capture Peacock. He was located one time in Florida, but made his escape before he could be arrested. The chase then led the prisoner officials to Cuba, thence to New York, and from New York to the far southwest. Peacock was in Mexico, then across the line into Mexico and back into Arizona. A short while ago he was located in Los Angeles, Cal., but got away before arrest could be made. He was then located at El Cajon, Cal., where he was arrested the first of the week. The hunt for Peacock had been going on quietly and the officials made every effort to keep the matter out of the newspaper so that Peacock would not learn that he was being followed.

Peacock, who shot Chief of Police Taylor to death on the streets of Thomasville, was tried at Lexington and ordered confined for life in the insane ward of the state prison. The murder of Chief Taylor was particularly brutal. The officer was shot by Peacock while he was standing on the street, the doctor shooting Taylor from a window on the second floor of a Thomasville building. Desperately wounded Taylor made his way into a drug store. Peacock after shooting the officer went down stairs and into the drug store where the wounded man lay. There he emptied his pistol into the chief's body.

Mr. Cox Explains About The Randleman Road

Recently Greensboro business men have been having much to say about the delay in the completion of the hard surface road from Randleman to Greensboro. Mr. J. Elwood Cox, of High Point, fifth district road commissioner, in an interview Saturday, makes explanation of the delay. According to Mr. Cox, the contract for the six-mile stretch from Randleman to the Guilford county line has not been let. However, Ziegler and Dalton, who have built the road from Greensboro to Randleman, are privileged to build this six-mile stretch on the same basis they have built the other part of the road if they want the contract. The highway commission feels that Ziegler and Dalton have done good work in road building and are a reliable firm, and that this firm of contractors can build the balance of the project more quickly and more cheaply than if the contract is let to another firm.

Mr. L. F. Fentris Dies At Franklinville

Mr. L. F. Fentris, one of the county's foremost and most influential citizens, died at his home at Franklinville Tuesday, aged 68 years. He had been in ill health practically all summer, suffering from high blood pressure. He had consulted eminent specialists and was in Memorial hospital in Asheboro for several weeks in the spring and was temporarily improved. While fairly comfortable, Mr. Fentris had no hope of recovery. He was for many years postmaster of Franklinville and an active participant in all religious, civic, and social affairs. He was a staunch and loyal supporter of Methodism and was a member of the M. E. church of Franklinville. He was stricken while performing the duty of postmaster, falling on the way from the postoffice to the station. He was the son of the late J. H. Fentris. He is survived by a wife who was the youngest daughter of the late Sheriff Steel, also by a brother J. H. Fentris, of Franklinville. The funeral will be held from the M. E. church in Franklinville at 3 P. M. today, after which burial will follow.

RANDOLPH COUNTY FAIR IN PROGRESS

Opened Yesterday With Large Number of Exhibits--To Be Best Fair Held Here.

The fourth annual Randolph county fair opened at the fair grounds in north Asheboro yesterday morning for what promises to be the biggest and best fair ever held in the county. There are exhibits in place from practically every section of the county. In the main hall are the booths of many of the business houses and manufacturing plants of the county, the fancy work department, pantry products, educational section, historical relics, and the department devoted to the colored people of the county. The art department is larger and better than ever, and so is the fancy work department. All the departments are good and probably better than last year.

A very interesting booth is that of the Caswell Training School, of Kinston, a state maintained institution ranging from bead work of the smaller children to the elaborate felt crocheted work of the older girls. A display of practical dresses, aprons and other garments are sent out by the girls of the school, and the boys have sent woven rugs and baskets.

A number of people in the state are not acquainted with the work and purposes of this institution and a booth of this kind is being displayed at the fair this year in order that the public may know just what the institution is doing for the feeble minded of the state. The institution can accommodate only about 360 patients and is always full. There is a waiting list of 2500 and additional facilities are badly needed by the training school.

Other interesting exhibits are those of the Randolph Mills, of Franklinville, Southern Crown Milling Company, Home Building and Material company, Bland Piano company, of Troy, Fox Furniture Company, and the makers of Maxwell House coffee. S. T. Mosley, of Ramoth, has an exhibit of hand made chairs. Many of these booths are artistically arranged and are educational aside from their advertising purposes.

In the agricultural building are exhibits of the farm field, and orchard. In this building also are the exhibits of automobiles. From the feature of the displays in this building is the display of the county fairs. Farmer, Seagrave, and Flint Hill have attractive and interesting exhibits. Holly Springs community fair is not represented for the reason that rain interfered with the holding of the fair and the exhibits were not gotten together.

There is a marked improvement in the number of pure bred stock at the fair this year. The chickens are here today will be the dog show. Tomorrow, Friday, is school day, and Saturday is home coming day.

John M. Porter Injured In Automobile Wreck

Mr. John M. Porter, of Charlotte, son-in-law of Mr. W. H. Morring, of Asheboro, sustained severe cuts about the face and hands, and bruises on the chest, as a result of an automobile accident on the road three miles north of Lexington Sunday afternoon, while en route home. His brother, Mr. Ed Porter, who was in the car also was not injured. The car was badly damaged. Mr. Porter was taken to the hospital at Lexington where his wounds were dressed and he later left for his home at Charlotte.

The accident occurred when the car on the road directly in front of Mr. Porter's car stopped suddenly and to keep from running into the rear of the car, Mr. Porter was compelled to turn his car quickly to the left with the result that it overturned, pinning Mr. Porter, who was driving, under the steering wheel.

MISS BEATRICE BULLA INTERESTING WRITER

Writes Chapters In Books and Magazine Article Which Create National Interest.

Miss Beatrice Bulla, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Bulla, of Washington, D. C., has for four years been with The National Bank of Commerce in New York, one of the largest commercial banks in the United States, has been writing upon different subjects concerning some of the great commodities which occupy an important place in the economic life of the country. Miss Bulla wrote two articles, one on "Iron and Steel," the other on "Sugar," which appeared in chapter form in a book published in 1922 by The Bank of Commerce in New York, entitled, "Some Great Commodities." Miss Bulla edited the entire volume. It is a book written for the business man and the student, each story of the important commodities, explaining source of supply and the place of the commodity in domestic trade and commerce of the world.

Miss Bulla has recently written an article for The Commerce Monthly, a journal of commerce and finance published by The National Bank of Commerce in New York, on "Stabilization of the Moving Picture Industry," which has been favorably criticized by The Literary Digest, The New York Times and The Film Daily, Exhibitors Herald, as a motion picture publication.

The motion picture industry is slowly getting out of the class of a game and more in the class of a business. On this point the public and the industry are in agreement. The evolution is not yet complete, but to its progress the events of 1922 and 1923 have contributed notably. They will be an admission of the fact that the industry cannot realize its greatest possibilities under the former spectacular financial methods and that it must inevitably conform to normal standards and requirements of business. A settling-down process has been taking place during the past two years, resulting in the establishment of three fundamental principles: first, that production costs cannot be enlarged indefinitely without straining the financial basis of production to the breaking point; second, that sound financing methods are indispensable for the progress of the industry; and third, that public approval and good will are its most valuable assets.

The history of the moving picture industry is intensely interesting and its growth is amazing. Since Edison's Kinetograph was exhibited at the World's Fair in Chicago thirty years ago, the industry has been expanding and growing in popularity. While it is generally supposed that moving pictures are an amusement, from an educational and advertising standpoint is most advantageous. The Commerce Monthly in speaking of financing the moving picture industry says:

"Costs of production in this industry, as in others, have risen rapidly in the past few years. Once it was possible to produce an acceptable 'feature' picture for a few thousand dollars. Now the average is between $100,000 and $200,000. 'Supercosts' which have been exploited in very recent years cost from $700,000 to $1,500,000. Cost does not determine quality, however. Producers have learned that it is possible to earn a large profit on a good $100,000 picture as on one which costs $200,000.

In the short life of the motion picture industry, American producers have reaped a golden harvest. Of a possible 300,000 picture theatres in the world, 15,000 are in the United States with a weekly attendance now estimated at 50,000,000 and weekly admissions of $10,000,000. Annual rentals paid in the United States are conceded to be larger than rentals paid in all other countries put together. The fat years of the period of 1914 to 1920 when wages were rising and the industry an opportunity which may never be repeated. Not only did the free-spending habits of the American public enlarge the home market for pictures progressively but there was almost entire freedom from foreign competition. Imports of foreign pictures (not raw film) when at their high-water mark in 1921 were valued at less than $1,500,000 while exports of American pictures in that year reached a total value of $6,500,000. In 1921-22 the hue and cry was raised by producers against the invasion of German films, but evidence of injury to the American industry is practically lacking.

"Forward the close of 1923, overproduction, 'big pictures' and lack of cost control had brought the industry to a point where its finances were not sufficiently liquid for safety. Drastic measures of retrenchment were demanded by several of the larger companies even to the point of closing the studios for a number of weeks last fall. The desirability of keeping production under the direct supervision of financial departments which are located in the East led to an increase in activity in Eastern studios. California's supremacy is not seriously endangered, however.

Changes in the motion picture industry will be chief in the direction of standardizing its methods and weeding out speculative and irregular practices. Many unsound producing concerns have been eliminated or absorbed. Serious efforts are under way to prevent the marketing of pictures which have no "box office value" and to assure the independent producer of good pictures that he will receive the returns which are his. A movement for the organization of smaller independent interests has been launched. From now on the moving picture will be a less speculative business but a safer one.

RAPIST NEWS LETTER

The subject of censorship has probably been more generally discussed than any other connected with moving pictures, and Miss Bulla writes that producers and exhibitors are opposed to the idea of censoring pictures which have no "box office value" and to assure the independent producer of good pictures that he will receive the returns which are his.

The fourth annual community fair was held at Farmers on Friday, September 19th. This annual event has grown to such an extent that it is looked forward to by both old and young with pleasant anticipation year after year.

RAPIST NEWS LETTER

The fair was held under the leadership and supervision of Mr. Millaps, county demagogues agent. Mr. McCrary, the district agent, accompanied Mr. Millaps and showed his expert knowledge of agriculture in general by the manner in which he went about judging the farm exhibits and livestock.

Miss Harris and Mrs. York did the judging in the women's department. Very favorable comment was passed upon the varied display of fancy work, canned fruits, and vegetables. A string band, composed largely of local talent, was on hand to furnish music for the occasion. Another favorable feature on the program was the delicious dinner which was spread on the grounds at the noon hour.

The people are assured that the community fairs are of inestimable value from an educational standpoint. Each farmer and housewife is enabled to see what can be grown or produced upon the farms of the community. It teaches methods of farming and housekeeping which causes the efforts of all to count for most. The community fair is a social feature which draws the people of the community together and creates a spirit of cooperation which may be held in no other way.
