MOST anybody can drive a car, but looking after it is really a mechanic's job. The trouble is that lots of people just drive and drive and drive. As long as the car goes they think everything is O.K.

Men with some mechanical training get the most out of their cars. They know that they must oil in advance. It's usually too late if you wait till a squeak develops or a bearing heats up. Still, anyone with a mechanical turn of mind can acquire the habit of paying proper attention to lubrication.

There's just one safe rule. Oil and grease on a definite schedule-a mileage basis. Make it a matter of regular routine. It is not a question of once a week or once a month, but every 500 miles, 1000 miles or 1500 miles, depending on the part of the car to be lubricated.

It does not really take long to oil a car properly and if pays for itself over and over again in smooth running, low repairs and long life. If you are in doubt as to where, when, and how to oil, take your car round to your service man. Watch him put in the "Standard" Polarine Motor Oil. Next time you will be able to do most of it yourself.

Changing the crank case oil is the main lubrication job. Also the dirtiest. It will usually pay to have it done for you. "Standard" Service Stations and most "Standard" dealers are equipped to do it for you promptly and well.

Save yourself time, trouble and money by starting on a regular oiling schedule today.
