Coltrane, of Trinity, presided over the convention sessions, and J. W. Meredith and Oscar Bhaylock, also of Trinity township, seted as secretaries. Herbert E. Seawell, of Carthage, Republican candidate for Governor, made a short address before the delegates got down to the business of nominating candidates for county offices. He complained that although taxes on incomes could not exceed six per cent, land and personal property were compelled to bear too much of the burden of taxation. He favored a State method of taxation for schools, a method which was endorsed last week by the North Carolina Press Association in meeting at Sedgefield Inn. Mr. Seawell was also in favor of an equalization fund for schools in addition to the State method of taxation, as he called it. He paid high tribute to the National and State Republican tickets.

Indifference To Law Enforcement Is Common Thing

Judge Oglesby Tells Rotarians At Banquet Last Friday In Church Dining Hall.

Courts Are Neglected

Average Citizen Pays Little At-tention As To How Laws Of The Land Are Enforced.

Judge John M. Oglesby, in Asheboro presiding over civil term of Randolph Superior Court, spoke to the Rotarians at their regular weekly luncheon Friday in the dining hall of the local Methodist Protestant church. Judge Oglesby took as the theme of his talk the indifference of the people in general to the courts and to law ments and advancements.

Judge Oglesby pointed out that when a new industry is required for a community, when good roads are needed, when good school buildings and additional churches are necessary, the people of the communities affected enter heart and soul into the endeavor to obtain these things. Yet, these same good citizens are indifferent to law enforcement. They seldom visit the courtrooms during the sessions of court to see how the laws are administered, and often when called to serve in the jury box make every honorable effort to evade service. And yet, the courts are institutions responsible to the citizenship of the country and are a vital and necessary part of our common government.

A bed on which the Hurley baby was sleeping was riddled with bullets, some of which barely missed hitting the sleeping child. The gunmen remained about the house for some time, leaving about 4 o'clock. He recited the wonderful progress that has been made in North Carolina during the past quarter, of a century in good roads, schools, churches, industry, and, in fact, almost every line of endeavor; and told of the interest which the citizenship of the State had taken in these matters. On the other hand, progress in law enforcement and law observance has not gone hand in hand with these other improvements and advancements.

Judge Oglesby pointed out that when a new industry is required for a community, when good roads are needed, when good school buildings and additional churches are necessary, the people of the communities affected enter heart and soul into the endeavor to obtain these things.
