Farm Relief Job Getting Started In This County

Several Mules Already Received For Placement Among Farmers in Randolph.

Is Planned Program

And It Is Hoped To Do Away With Direct Relief, And To Put Families On Feet.

The local Federal Emergency Relief office has eleven mules to be placed with as many farmers, as a part of the farm rehabilitation program undertaken throughout the United States, and will have more mules and pigs and cows before the spring season is over.

But it is no "forty acres and a mule" program that the Federal government is putting into practice like the carpet baggers pulled on the newly-freed negroes in the south in reconstruction days; nor does it smack of any such practices.

It is a determined and planned program of the federal government to do away with direct relief and to enable any able-bodied man to make sustenance for himself and family, to become a part of the economic network of the country on a substantial basis.

The farm rehabilitation program, which will be the major part of federal relief this spring and the coming summer and fall, embraces a plan to put in the hands of small farmers, tenant farmers and city and town folk who want to go and should be on the farms, an opportunity to get started. They will pay for the mules, cows and hogs that they get from the federal emergency relief office, but will pay for them as they are able; they will do their farm work along a well ordered plan and know next December 1st whether they are in the red or have broken even or made a little.

Direct federal relief is a thing of the past in families where there is one or more able bodied men. The government will help them in an economic way, but straight out giving is a thing of the past. This sort of program is directed in North Carolina by George Ross and in Randolph county by Joe Ellis, young State College graduate and former farm demonstrator, a young man born and reared on a Randolph county farm and from one of the county's best families. He will be ably assisted by R. T. Lloyd, county federal emergency relief director, and by Ewing S. Millaps, Jr., county farm agent.

With the work these three men are doing for the farmers of the county by virtue of their connection with the federal government means that farmers in Randolph county who need assistance of one sort or another are going to get it.

The CWA program in Randolph put out approximately $100,000 in cold cash, distributed among working people in all parts of the county. Much good was done with this amount of money, though there are grounds for critics of the program to stand on. But the government was faced with a big job and did it quickly. There were flaws in it, no doubt, as all human agencies are not perfect. Experience, however, has wrought a change, and the federal government is moving toward a more lasting relief.

The relief work will not be directed in its entirety to farmers, but those city folk who need work and must have work and can't get it elsewhere, will probably be taken care of under public works program, which will likely supersede CWA activities when the change from one plan to another is completed. For instance, federal emergency relief workers are expected to complete street widening in Asheboro, finish the airport job and some incomplete jobs in the county.

To Begin Survey Uwharrie National Forest Acreage In Randolph County

Immediate survey and appraisal of land embraced in the Uwharrie National Forest unit is planned by the federal government, which sent two representatives to Asheboro yesterday to establish headquarters.

The law office formerly occupied by the mechanical department of The Courier was rented as office headquarters for the staff working in Randolph and a part of Davidson. The headquarters will be established May 1st and a force of surveyors, appraisers and engineers will be placed on the project in the county. Representatives here yesterday were W. P. Kramer, superintendent of the Pisgah National Forest in western North Carolina and M. S. Wright, supervisor of surveys of the Regional Office in Washington.

The land embraced in the Uwharrie unit is estimated at 80 per cent forest and 20 per cent cleared land, and the entire area is estimated to contain more than a half million acres, represented by mountain and forest land in Randolph, Davidson, Moore and Montgomery counties, drained by the Pee Dee and Cape Fear rivers. Work on the plan is already under way in Montgomery county.

Erosion control, withdrawal of poor land from cultivation, watershed protection, timber production elimination of fire hazards, and the like, will be embraced in the government's plan in developing the Uwharrie. Attention will be given also to public parks and scenic drive ways.

Each individual tract of land in the area will be surveyed and a value arrived at. No land owner will be required to sell, nor will there be any condemnation proceedings. What the government estimates as a fair value will be placed on the land and this price offered the land owner. It is then up to the land owner as to whether he wants to sell. Should a man own and cultivate a good farm within the area embraced by the proposed forest and desire to remain in possession of same as a home and farm, such man may do so, although the government would like to come into possession of any and all land within the prescribed area. Mineral rights may be reserved by those who sell to the government.

Prior to the survey of the area, aerial photographs will be made in order to obtain a general view of the topography, types of timber, and to assist in the general plan for the forest work to be done.

Cause Of Public Health Advanced By CWA Activity

Sanitary Privy Construction In Randolph Under CWA Was Great Sanitation Job.

Many Filth Diseases Caused By Bad Sanitation, And Sanitary Privies Great Help In Fighting Them.

The termination of CWA activities in Randolph County on March 29th brought to a close one of the most worth while public health programs ever undertaken on a county-wide basis, for with the passage of the Civil Works Administration into history there was brought to a standstill the pit privy construction work that has been underway for the past several months.

The pit privy construction activity has done much to advance the cause of public health, not because of the actual number of privies constructed to date for many more of them are needed, but because the people have become conscious of a need for greater cleanliness of the premises of individual households and for improved community sanitation as well. In becoming conscious of a need for a better sanitary environment, the individual or the community is taking the first step in the great war against disease.

The diseases that develop as the direct result of an insanitary environment are the so-called filth diseases, chief of which are typhoid fever, colitis, dysentery, and hookworm disease. The germs of the first three and the eggs and organisms of the fourth are expelled in large quantities in the bowel discharges of an afflicted person and because of this fact, human excrement improperly disposed of it a menace to the health of the citizens of a household or community.

Hookworms gain entrance to the intestinal tract of man through the skin and blood stream. Soil that has become contaminated with fecal matter from a person afflicted with hookworm is likely to contain myriads of these organisms and their eggs. In order for a person to become infested with such terrible creatures all that is necessary is that the infested soil be trod by bare feet. The hookworm usually enter the body through the skin of the feet, producing what is commonly called "ground itch." Once embedded in the skin the organisms gradually work their way into the blood stream and thence into the intestinal tract. Once established in the intestines of a person, hookworm prevents the proper assimilation of food and causes the victim to lose weight, vitality, and interest in practically everything. Hookworms sap the strength of a person, tear down body resistance and makes the victim an easy prey for the microbes of other diseases. Persons afflicted with hookworm are usually spoken of by their fellowmen, who are ignorant of the cause of their lassitude, as being of no-account and good-for-nothing. The drain upon the resources of relatives and the governments, state, and local occasioned by hookworm amounts to an appreciable figure each year. Children, because of the almost universal custom of allowing them to go barefooted during the warm months of the year are especially susceptible to the disease.

Typhoid fever, dysentery, and the other bacterial or germ diseases of the intestinal tract are usually contracted as the result of a person eating or drinking the germs of these ailments. The transfer of germs from human excrement to the body of a well person is effectuated in a variety of ways. Flies have been known to transfer germs from human excrement to the body of a well person in a variety of ways. Flies have
