Hoey Headquarters Open In Asheboro With Active Nucleus For Organization

Asheboro Organization Complete With Committees Beginning To Form In County

W. C. Page Serving As Chairman Here

J. V. Wilson Will Act As Secretary With Miss Helen York In Charge Of Office

Headquarters for Clyde R. Hoey, candidate for governor of North Carolina are now open in Asheboro with a nucleus of a working organization well in hand. The offices are located on the second floor of the law building adjoining the office of J. V. Wilson, attorney.

W. C. Page is chairman of the executive committee with J. V. Wilson, secretary, Miss Helen York, daughter of the late J. A. York, who died while serving as chairman of the Democratic forces in Randolph, is serving as secretary. This practically completes the organization for the town of Asheboro, which will then branch out into the county. The local group includes names of men and women of every walk of life and business. Professional men, owners of business plants, day laborers, farmers, barbers, merchants and from every field represented in the life of Randolph county.

Mr. Hoey is no stranger in this section of the state where he has spoken in many campaigns, usually for fellow Democrats who were seeking the nomination for some office. He is known far and wide through the borders of his home state as a staunch Democrat whose oratory made him one of the most sought after speakers of the entire state. He is a lawyer whose ability has gone far beyond the confines of his own state and whose combined oratory and legal ability make him a most desirable attorney for those in need of defense.

A business man, himself, he speaks the language of the practical man and woman of the business world today. His business, however, has always been made to leave room for his church work and he has for years taught one of the largest Sunday school classes of the Methodist churches in North Carolina.

From his home in Shelby, Mr. Hoey has become known as Democrat of unquestioned loyalty and devotion to his party and to his fellow citizens in North Carolina. He is seeking the nomination as governor in North Carolina on a platform which he has already made public through the press of the state and answers questions fearlessly and in a straightforward manner whenever it becomes necessary or advisable in clearing up a point of his campaign.

Schools Of Randolph Have Additions And Three New Buildings

PWA Funds Enable Schools Of This County To Have Additions And Improvements

Work on the Ramseur and Staley schools, where additional classrooms have been built, is about complete, according to county superintendent T. Fletcher Bulla. Six rooms were added to the old building at Ramseur, and four were added to the Staley school. Construction is now going on in Asheboro and New Market.
