Labor Group Now Meeting Florida Approve New Deal

Rough Outline Of President's Plans Given By Two White House Emissaries

Green-Lewis Feud

Secretary Perkins Plans Conference With Union Leaders At Early Date

The annual convention of American Federation of Labor, meeting this week in Tampa, Fla., enthusiastically applauded the tentative outline of President Roosevelt's new program for the coming four years. The plan was roughly outlined by two White House emissaries.

Miss Perkins also said the Walsh-Healy government contract act, regarded by labor as an NRA substitute, must be broadened in its scope, and that "a strong union movement" was an essential supplement to a legislative program.

Berry predicted presidential election results would lead the Supreme Court to an about-face in judging New Deal legislation, and said his Labor-Industry council would have a legislative program ready for congress soon. The election results, he added, also brought many previously antagonistic business men into the council.

The convention's biggest issue—the feud between John L. Lewis' rebel unions and the federation's old guard over organization policy—simmered throughout the day. Max Zaritsky, president of the United Hatters, Cap and Millinery Workers, the only member of Lewis' rebel committee to come to the convention, arrived with "nothing to say."

"I have no rabbit to pull out of my hat," Zaritsky added when asked whether he had any new peace plans.

Miss Perkins disclosed she was planning a conference with union leaders to "discuss plans for legislation in which they are particularly interested." She spoke of a national living wage, continuity of income, stability of employment and "guidance for the conservation and maximum utilization of natural resources" as a formula for progress. She also urged ratification of the child labor amendment and cooperative action by states in raising labor standards.

After saying he "ventured we will find a legal way of furthering liberalism," if the Supreme Court killed more New Deal legislation, Berry asserted the "great task" before his council was preparation of "a sound and balanced program which will advance the general welfare by stabilizing industry."

Ceremonies Tuesday

J. C. B. Ehringhaus, Jr., Will Serve Until End Of This Term Without Pay

Charles G. Powell, who had been private secretary to Governor Ehringhaus since the beginning of his administration in 1933, was inaugurated Tuesday as Secretary of State for the six-weeks, unexpired term of Stacey W. Wade and J. C. B. Ehringhaus, Jr., elder son of the Governor, took the oath as Powell's successor in his father's office. The Governor appointed his son at the same time.

Installation ceremonies in the Governor's office at 11 o'clock were brief. Justice William A. Devin of the State Supreme Court, fellow-townsmen of the new Secretary of State in Oxford, administered the oaths. There were no speeches.

Present to witness the exercises and to congratulate Powell and Blucher Ehringhaus were members of the Powell family, the Council of State, and employees of the other offices around the Capitol.

Mrs. James B. Powell, mother of the New Secretary of State; Mrs. Sam C. Hall, his sister, with Mr. Hall; and J. B. Powell, his brother, came from Oxford for the ceremony.

Powell was appointed to succeed Stacey M. Wade, who resigned the constitutional office Monday afternoon, to accept the membership of the Raleigh office of the Federal Social Security Board.

Thad A. Eure, who defeated Wade for renomination in last July's Democratic primary, will take over the office in January. At the same time, Blucher Ehringhaus will be succeeded, probably by Robert L. Thompson, publicity director of Governor-elect Hoey's campaign.

The younger Ehringhaus will receive no pay for his brief term of service, the Governor said, and he will continue his studies for a law degree at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill. He was admitted to the bar last week in Elizabeth City.

Social Security Law Will Afford Practical Help

Program Begins Jan. 1, 1937, But No Benefits Paid Until 1942

Workers Numbered

Social Security Board Prepared To Assist Up To 30,000,000 Employees

The social security law is a practical beginning within the limits of practicable accomplishment, although it makes no attempt to cover every conceivable form of economic misfortune of every class of citizen. The act makes no pretense of being a cure-all. It attempts to mitigate some of the economic distress which has afflicted our people.

It seeks, through its maternal and child welfare provisions, services for crippled children, vocational rehabilitation and extension of public health services, to safeguard health and enable children and adults to overcome physical handicaps and economic maladjustments.

The provision for aid to dependent children will mean many children will be reared in their own good homes rather than taken from those homes, where the only fault is poverty, and reared in cold, impersonal public institutions at the expense of their communities.

It is estimated that there are more than 1,000,000 dependent children in the United States. Under the social security act, the federal government takes outright grants to states with approved laws to aid them in caring for these helpless children in their own homes. The federal law places no limit on the amount a state may provide for the care of a dependent child. It provides that there shall be granted to the state one-third of the amount it allows up to $18 a month for the first dependent child and $12 a month for each additional child.

Turning from the provisions for mothers and children, we find the law seeks to safeguard maturity against the slings and arrows of economic misfortune by providing a state-federal unemployment compensation program.

Unemployment compensation provides temporary relief against loss of income during temporary unemployment. Here again, as in instances heretofore mentioned, state legislation is needed, and in consequence, there is no universal standard for rate of compensation, period of waiting before compensation begins, nor the length of time during which it shall continue. Very generally, an individual re-

To Resume Work On Monday Morning At The Usual School Opening Hour

Special Programs Precede Holiday

Many County Schools Will Also Observe Same Holiday As Asheboro Plans

With Thanksgiving Day only a week off, the minds of all the youth of Asheboro and Randolph county are turning to the first big holiday of the year. Even the most scholastically inclined are ready to lay aside their books for a few days after ten weeks of steady going, and to most the vacation will be four days of unalloyed bliss. To the teachers as well as the pupils will the Thanksgiving holidays be welcome.

The Asheboro schools, Superintendent Reginald Turner said, will close at the regular hour Wednesday and work will not be resumed until the following Monday morning. The big event of the holiday as far as the school is concerned will be the football game with Wadesboro here, which though celebrated as the Thanksgiving game will be played Wednesday afternoon. The teachers who are charge of chapel for the few days, immediately preceding Thanksgiving are preparing programs commemorative of the day.

Many of the teachers are planning to return to their homes for the vacation. Others will attend the many college football games North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia as a means of relaxation from their school duties.

The county schools will observe the Thanksgiving holidays over a same period as the Asheboro schools, closing Wednesday afternoon. They too will have various programs appropriate to the day. A few small schools, County Superintendent T. Fletcher Bulla said, would probably remain in session straight through the week, without observing Thursday.

The colored school is also making plans for a big Thanksgiving. A Thanksgiving turkey will be given away at the school Monday night. On Tuesday the school will play its Thanksgiving football game with Troy coming here to furnish the opposition. School closes for the holidays Wednesday afternoon and reopens Monday morning, November 30.
