lay ordered a sweeping investigaon into alleged "tax dodging." The resolution was adopted during session marked with spirited debate on the tax-payment philoso-phy recently expressed by J. P.

Morgan stated "taxing is a legal estion, pure and simple and not moral one. Anyone has a right do anything as long as the law les not say it is wrong. I object strenuously to treating income-tax evasion as a moral issue.'

Representative Boileau, Progressive, Wisconsin, said it was unusual for him to be defending Mr. Morgan but that he agreed that tax evasion was not a moral question. If Congress leaves "loopholes in the laws," he said, "you can't blame others for taking advantage

In the House, Representative O'-Connor (D-N.Y.) led off the debate criticizing "brain trusters" who, he hinted, had something to do with the resolution as originally drafted. He said he was concern ed lest Congress surrender its prerogatives to individuals "holding important government jobs to dictate not only the form but the policy of Congress."

It was O'Connor who led a revolt against the original term of the resolution, which ended in a compromise worked out in the rules presented to the House.

The question raised is, "Can President Roosevelt legally appoint Devanter? Is there a possibility that the recent retirement act was unconstitutional, and that Justice Van Devanter, though inactive, remains a member of the tribunal with no vacancy existent?'

These questions are being raised by judges, lawyers and laymen students of constitutional law. They boro and three brothers, the Rev. are based on ingenious arguments. But the presumption is against them. For the Supreme Court itself says what is and what is not constitutional, and presumably members of the court supported the new procedure by which Justice Van Devanter last week became the first "inactive justice" in American history.

When Congress provided that retiring justices be called upon to perform judicial duties, if they are willing, "in any judicial circuit," the critics say, it is put in the pow-er of the Chief Justice ability or means to sway the majority of the ourt one way or the other.

Section 5 of the bill, giving the administrative board wide powers to establish minimum wage levels up to a maximum of $1,200 annually, received considerable at: tention of witness who appeared before the committee.

The bill was classed as "a long step towards complete government control of industry and labor, such as exists in several European

Harvey Wilson, general manager of the National Upholstery and Drapery Textile association, declared that such a step is neither necessary nor desirable in this country. After quoting from a recent statement of former NRA administrator, Hugh S. Johnson, Wilson said:

"We believe this bill, as a law, would be wholly unworkable and would result in confusion in industry far exceeding that connected with the attempt to administer the NRA, which was bad enough.'

Roy A. Cheney, managing director, of the underwear institute, objected to granting "autocratic power over industry to the President and demanded mandatory increases in tariff rates, in proportion to production and distribution cost increases effected by the bill.
