Court next week.
Capt. M. E. Carter has returned from Raleigh.
Col. A. T. Davidson has returned from Swain court.

The country is full of peddlers. Several have applied for license within the last few days.

Miss Mollie Baird is at home from Raleigh, where she has been for the past several months.

Mr. J. M. Ingle, of Marshall, has purchased property in Asheville and will in the future be a citizen of Buncombe.

Our thanks are due Mrs. T. E. Brown for a beautiful bouquet of flowers, composed of pansies and ferns.

The commencement exercises of Judson College will take place next week. Several of our citizens will attend.

There will be a meeting of the Northern Settlers' Association at the secretary's office this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

We learn that in several townships in Mitchell county at the election held last Monday, every vote was cast for prohibition.

Capt. Allen White, of Madison, brought to the city yesterday and sold to Mr. H. S. Harkins eight head of extra fine cattle.

The artesian well at Fayetteville is now 500 feet deep. It yields no water; though it is expected to yield 9,000 gallons a day.

The Western Union Telegraph Company will establish a branch office in Battery Park Hotel for the convenience of the guests at that place this summer.

The warehouses sold large quantities of tobacco yesterday. The offerings were of a good quality, and prices were high. There is yet a considerable part of last year's crop unmarketed.

It is said in Raleigh that the saloons must close immediately, but the Solicitor has decided, after conference with representatives from both sides, to let the saloons keepers have until the first of July to close up their business. Whether a Grand Jury will act in accordance with such an agreement is not known.

We were shown yesterday a diagram of the new front porch for the court house. It is to be built of iron, with four columns, and will be both very handsome and a decided improvement over the present dilapidated old fixture of a porch. Mr. W. O. Wolfe has the contract and will begin the work as soon as the materials arrive, which has been ordered. The ADVANCE can safely claim a part of the credit of this great improvement.

It is alleged that W. T. Blackwell, one of the largest property owners in Durham, advocated the wet ticket, and spent considerable money in the election. At the same time he was contributing to the prohibition cause in Raleigh, and paying speakers to advocate the dry ticket at the capitol. If this be true, his motives were to secure such a result as would enable Durham to furnish Raleigh, it being the nearest wet town, with its liquor, and to create a greater demand for his store rooms for saloons, which pay a high rental.

Palence Lamps.
With Duplex Burners. These are the newest and handsomest lamps on the market. Also new lot Palence Chamber Sets and Jugs. We offer Porcelain Dinner Sets at $12.50. Decorated $17.50. A new lot of Table Knives just in—prices as low as ever. Decorated Chamber Sets reduced to $6.25; Tea Sets to $6.25 for 56 pieces, at Law's Opposite Eagle Hotel.

JACK LAMBERT
Sentenced to be Hanged July 9th for the Murder of Dick Wilson.

Sheriff Rich has returned from Charleston, bringing with him Jack Lambert, who was ordered to be returned to the jail at this place for safe keeping until the time of his execution, which was fixed by Judge Shipp to take place on the 9th of July, at Charleston, the county seat of Swain, the prisoner having been tried and convicted at that place.

The crime for which Lambert is to pay the death penalty, was committed in the county of Jackson over a year ago. The victim was a man named Dick Wilson, against whom it was alleged Lambert entertained malice on account of a previous transaction. On the fatal night, both Lambert and Wilson were at a neighbor's house together, with other parties. Lambert was drinking and left the house before Wilson did. When the latter came out and started home, he was shot by some one concealed in a wagon bed. He lingered some days and died from the effects of the wound received.

Lambert was arrested, charged with the crime, and a true bill was found against him at the ensuing term of Jackson court. The case was moved to Swain and tried before Judge Gilmer one year ago, resulting in the conviction of Lambert. An appeal was prayed to the Supreme Court, and the judgment was affirmed by that tribunal.

Pending the appeal Lambert was confined in the jail at this place, under an order of the Judge, the jail at Charleston being considered unsafe. He was one of the number confined in the cells at the time of the escape of Bay, Anderson and others, but being in one of the lower cells, had not the opportunity to escape with the others.

Friends of the unfortunate man will make an effort to induce the Governor to commute the death sentence to imprisonment for life, but it is generally believed that such an effort will be in vain.

Judge Shipp and Solicitor Ferguson are expected in the city to-day.

Attention is called to the card of Wm. Quigley, in regard to artesian wells, force pumps for water supply, etc.

Mr. T. R. Yeatman, after spending the winter at Palatka, Fla., has returned to this city. His many friends are glad to welcome him back.

Mr. John A. Williams, editor of the Live Stock Journal, has returned from Fayetteville bringing his family with him. Asheville will be his future home.

Transylvania county wants a railroad to Asheville or Hendersonville. Cannot Asheville take some action in the matter and aid in bringing a road from Brevard to this place?

The ground around Mt. Mitchell Hotel are being beautified and made very attractive. Mr. Timberlake had the services of about fifty convicts in putting down turfing a few days ago.

Yesterday's train from the East was delayed several hours by a washout in the long tunnel on the mountain. It was after 7 o'clock last evening before trains were moving all right. Capt. McBea superintended in person the work of repairing the damage.

In the event that the bill now pending in Congress, providing for a public building in Asheville should become a law, as it unquestionably will, where will the building be located? We know of several locations well adapted to the purpose, and the owners are already manifesting some interest in the matter.

We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Moore & Robards, which will be found in to-day's paper. These young gentlemen have opened a bakery, restaurant and ice cream saloon, at Desmond's old stand, and invite the people of Asheville to call on them. Their restaurant is fitted up in elegant style and will no doubt receive a good patronage.

Don't fail to call on McMullen & Tilson for Cradles, Cribbs, &c.

OUR NOBLE WOMEN.
A Reply to the Citizen Correspondent "A."

Asheville, N. C., June 11, '86.
EDITORS ADVANCE.—On the 7th inst., a communication appeared in the Citizen, over the signature of "A," which, no doubt, meant well; but I wish to say that I do not endorse the sharp criticism therein contained, in reference to the part taken by the ladies of Asheville in the recent election, on what is called prohibition, but really license or no license. I did not vote for prohibition for the reason that a refusal to issue license still left whisky, brandy, wine, beer and all the appliances of intoxication in our midst to be sold clandestinely by great numbers of persons, who would risk the violation of the law. I entertained the opinion, that under the circumstances, we had this monstrous evil under better control than if turned loose with all the venom of the wounded snake. It was not believed that the cause of temperance would be promoted by the refusal to issue license, for this was the proposition and nothing more. That there may be laws tending to promote temperance is, perhaps, true, but must be different from that now proposed.

Thus far, I might agree with "A," but hundreds of others in the very opinion I have great confidence, including the women of Asheville (whose intelligence and judgment command the very highest appreciation) thought otherwise. A man cannot be said to be liberal minded, who can see no good in those whom we chance to oppose, or with whom we cannot differ. I think any movement that enlists the ministers of the Gospel almost in a body and almost the solid approbation of the women of the land should have the effect to make men hesitate, deliberate, and at least act cautiously and with much misgivings and distrust.

The character and influence of our women are such, that the very fact of a proposition affecting the welfare of our nation, being approved by them and sanctified by tears and imprecations to God is almost sufficient to challenge disapproval. That they intend right, that their heroic Christian efforts have done more to redeem the world than all other human means, none but the most ungracious misanthrop will deny. But to the communication. The writer says:

"Women can be Evangelists, but it should be in a womanly way. In these days, when all vocations are open to them, and it is almost as supposed that they can enter any without unsexing themselves, it still is not considered consonant with their dignity and self-respect, to march about the streets, as do the 'Army Salvationists,' or button-hole passers-by, irrespective of assistance, class, color, or condition.

To do good is their mission; and though charity should not end at home, it is better that good works should commence and continue in the domestic circle, and if enlarged within bounds of organized methods. It is to be hoped that the women canvassers in their last campaign would do just exactly the same again, seeing that after all the sacrifices made, (and certainly women must make sacrifices, to do what they did,) the result is what it is." It is suggested here that these faithful devoted women did "button-hole passers-by, irrespective of acquaintance, class, color, or condition." This picture is much overdrawn and calculated to make an erroneous impression upon the public.

I saw nothing of this kind, which patook of the slightest impropriety. On the contrary, for womanly dignity, modest Christian conduct and unselfish efforts I have seen nothing to compare in my life. That they sought to elevate the colored man and the degraded dram shop loafer, by urging them to assemble and hear argument, and submit to the gentle influences of song and music was certainly commendable. It was her mission to elevate and make better these people. What a noble object! How much like Him of whom it is said, he "ate with publicans and sinners." Why should not women and children with music and mottoes intended for good, come upon the streets on the day of election? Should this day be one of unchecked recklessness and debauchery? Are the influences of the fireside and the destiny of all the bright-eyed children of the land to be forgotten in the wild excited rush of partisan voters? Does the ballot box (so often the engine for corruption) need no restraints.

How are the great moral battles of this world to be fought? Must it not be done by the heroes and heroines rushing to the front in defiance of the criticisms of the blackguard or the machinations of the devil? In this sunny Southern land of ours, we have a sort of sickly sentimentalism about what a woman must do and what she must not do. Poverty and misfortune have compelled many of them to buffet with a cold, critical world. They of all others, feel from the heart, the effects of the blighting, damning curse of intemperance. And now, when they are made to believe that something may be done to soothe the ten thousand heart aches of the land, and stop the cry for bread, which comes in such melancholy strains from millions of homes made miserable and desperate by intemperance, is it strange that the women of the land come to the rescue? Shall they be the object of censure, and "scolded like a spoiled child," for every little error of judgment? Suppose we, the "lords of creation," we, who do all the voting, and assume to know so much, were held up to ridicule and criticism for all our little mistakes of judgment? Would we not show to a disadvantage? I wish to say, in compliment to the men, (even those most hostile to their views,) on the day of election not a word of insult was uttered nor an ungalant act observed towards these ladies within the hearing of the writer; while from many a brawny face there came unbidden tears with expressions of face that clearly indicated woman's power in this land. Let it not be diminished. Their defiance of the criticism of the rabble point out the traits of the true heroine.

FAIR PLAY.

Civil Service.
In the House of Representatives, Tuesday, Mr. Cox, of North Carolina, chairman of the committee on civil service reform, said the friends of civil service reform had nothing to fear from the discussion which had taken place. He had nothing to say about violation of the law. No law could be judged by a faithless administration of it. It was no argument to say that it had been violated. The first law that had been passed looking in this direction was passed by a democratic congress in 1883. The reform was then inaugurated, and it went on up to the time of the war, and the greatest spokesman who had ever occupied the white House had been Andrew Johnson. The first bill that had ever been introduced after that time had been in 1864, but the politicians had been opposed to it, because it prevented them from disposing of offices to pay their political debts. But reform had gone on and this reform would go on. Talk about it being aristocratic, it was the very essence of democracy. It gave the people a pure service. If carried out in its purity it would decrease the expenses of the public service and that was one reason why the reform had gone on. It had been opposed by politicians, but a great power, the voice that made politicians, had demanded that the reform should go on. In 1871 a law had been passed in regard to civil service and both parties had found it necessary to incorporate reform planks in their platforms. If they thought that it was a sham and a fraud they held out false hopes to the people. From that time on civil service reform had continued to grow until to-day the country saw both sides apologizing for not carrying out the law in its integrity. The gentleman from Illinois (Cannon) had said yesterday that he believed the chief executive was the most popular democrat in the country. He would add to that remark and say he was the most popular man of either party in the country. Why was it? Because he was known to be a man of the highest integrity of purpose; that when he gave his pledge to the people he would stand by that pledge. [Applause.] The country had an executive who was attempting to carry out the law in its integrity, and the question was whether congress would stand by him. If congress would not the people of the United States would not [Applause.] The rider on the bill would deprive the executive of the power of making such rules and regulation as he thought best. He (Cox) had every reason to believe that it was the purpose of the commission to change the rules and amend them.

The Two Parties in Congress.
Congress has entered upon the seventh month of its session, and its proceedings have presented to the country a wretched spectacle. The Republican Senate and the Democratic House, though divided by party spirit, are united in their joint incapacity to solve any important questions of legislation. In all the weary months since the last of December not a measure of public interest has been passed, except the bill for settling the Presidential succession.

Some years ago a pretty good market for Confederate bonds was developed in England on the basis of a report that the Confederacy had large sums deposited in various London banks at the time of the collapse. The story was shown to be false, and Confederate bonds ceased to find buyers. The speculation is to be revived; however, it appears. The English holders of evidences of the debt of the Confederacy have employed a lawyer to urge the liability of the United States for the whole amount, and this legal gentleman has actually appeared before a House committee to show that the United States, in annexing the Confederacy, annexed its debt. The fourth amendment to the constitution holds that the United States shall not pay any debt incurred "in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States," which is conclusive, if the resistance of the seceding States to the effort to bring them back into the Union is correctly described as "insurrection or rebellion."

Drowned.
A white man and a negro in a two horse buggy drove into the Clinch river at Spear's Ferry, one day last week, and missing the route, the team was soon in swimming water. The team and the negro were drowned, together with a lead horse that was tied to the buggy. The white man swam to the bank. We did not learn the name of either party.

Since writing the above we learn that the white man was named J. D. V. Invilers, a mineralogist from Philadelphia, and the colored man that was drowned was Peter Campbell, from Tazewell, Va., and the horses from the livery stable at that place. The body of the drowned man had not been recovered at last accounts.—Rogersville Review.

An Old Citizen Speaks.
Mr. J. M. Norris, an old resident of Rome, Ga., says, that he had been badly troubled with Kidney Complaint for a great many years and with Eczema for three years; at times could scarcely walk and had tried many remedies without benefit, until he began taking Electric Bitters and anointing his hands and feet with Bucklen's Arnica Salve. This treatment afforded him great relief and he strongly recommends Electric Bitters to all who suffer with Kidney Complaints, or need a Blood Purifier. Sold by H. H. Lyons.

A judicious application of pointed conductors, both on land and sea, is not only desirable, but in general is absolutely essential to the preservation of buildings and ships from the ravages of lightning.

Plain but Important.
The object of a lightning rod upon a building is merely to furnish conductors, whereby the electricity discharged from a thunder cloud, may fully escape into the earth without causing injury. It is in fact, just as simple a matter, as cutting ditches or putting in drains, to carry off the super abundant moisture from a piece of wet land. Both serve as conductors to remove harmlessly an injurious element.
Mr. W. C. Gotham will erect these conductors on short notice. Office at A. C. Davis' store.
