ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

Three Suggestions Which Deserve Careful Consideration.

There appears to be no end to the suggestions as to how to improve our highways, nor should the agitation of the subject cease until better ways are adopted-ways that render our roads passable at all seasons of the year so Preaching at the Presbyterian far as mud is concerned. To this end I have a few suggestions to make:

1. It is absolutely essential that the roadbed be dry. In order to guarantee this a tile drain must be laid in all low level places. I would lay the tile in the center of the road.

2. For the time being our roads will be made by throwing up the earth into the center. Let this be done in a well-rounded form, but not too wide, and nicely smoothed and rounded up, so that water will run off freely into the

3. Do away with the narrow tire on our wagon wheels. The difference in the power necessary to haul a wagon with wide tires on hard, smooth reads over the narrow tire is so trifling that it would scarcely be perceptible.

Were the three suggestions I have named adopted and practiced I am of bad roads. The practice heretoface of scraping up the earth with a common scraper and dumped in piles and only worse; and no man is fit for road W. McCracken. ### ECACR YTHUCO TUDEA mon Ordinary Clay.

The roadfed through a wet and swampy country, and where the surface of the road is below the land on each side, will become wet from the moisture which soaks up from the bottom, the source of the water on each side being higher than the road; such roads in the spring, and other wet weather, will become impassable. The only way to drain such a road is longitodinally, with three-inch drain tiles, running the whole length of the rand to be drained; one line of tile beneath the maille of the road, and one baneath each sile; it should be of the porous cheap tile, such as that u of in some sections for sub-soil irrigition. which will freely a lmit the water; the larger the pores the better. This will earry off all the water, and the air passing through the tiles will keep the

A few years ago this rimi was so muldy as to be for weeks at a time almost impassable. From photograph. the clay from the subsoil for the road; this clay should be free from organic matter, as far as possible, should be dry and compact, ground fine and should be put on in thin layers and rolled as hard as possibler in this respect our common rocal rollers are defective in their operation; while they level and compress the surface, they do not allow the air and moisture to escape; they fail to pack the dirt firmly and to make the road solid and hard.

This can only be done with a roller, constructed on the principle of the tempering wheel wed in the old time brick yards, which roller should be made with narrow steel tires with sonces between. A heavy roller constructed on this plan would render the road hard and smooth. Notice how the bottoms of ponds are made water tight by the trampling of hogs and cattle, and other animals having split hoofs. This could not be done by the feet of horses and mules, they having solid hoofs compress the surface and leave the clay undisturted a f- winches below, as does our common read roller. The road must be kneaded, ground and packed from the bottom upward in layers so thin that the roller jeuctrates to the bottom of each, expelling all the air and moisture. To keep the surface of the road dry and hard, it should have crown enough to make the transverse grade greater than the longitudinal grade which would run the most of the water to the side ditches. If the water be permitted to run down the roal constantly increasing in volume and velocity, it will wash away the best of roads.

Where the road is very sleep, transverse ridges would assid in turning the water to the siles. Keeping the roads in repair should be the duty of competent men, who should devote signed at his office in Asheville, N. C., their whole time to it. Roads can only be made in warm weather and after every rain this knewling roller should be applied to harden and pack them; summer wind and sun would evaporate all the organic matter and moisture, and the road world not beave in the spring when the frost leaves the groupd; notice the soil in a hard, dry bank where air and moisture do not pendicate, no heaving there. I am inelined to the belief that roads should follow the natural lay of the country, rather than direct lines which necesstate depends. I write this not as a matured plan, but on casa suggestion, and to earload there, it needs and the resuit of the olse values of others -John C. Bender, in Burnt World.
