The memorial address will be delivered at Chisora Cemetery at three o'clock p.m. the 10th of May. We forgot to give the hour in our last issue.

Col. Breckinridge will "fight it out to the bitter end." And a bitter end it will be. [Memphis Com.]

Yes; and he will resemble the man that got licked.

The Waldenses have arranged to build a hosiery mill at Valdese, their settlement in Burke county. The mill is contracted for. Only Waldenses will be employed. Mr. Miller, a Swisshon who has operated a mill at Charlotte, has joined the colony, and will have charge of the new mill.

HON. THOS. J. JARVIS Succeeds the Late Zeb. B. Vance.

Gov. Jarvis was at Yarboro when he was notified of his appointment, and at once wrote to Gov. Carr the following letter of acceptance, which we clip from the News-Observer and Chronicle of the 20th inst.:

"RALEIGH, April 19, 1894. His Excellency, Hon. Elias Carr, Governor of North Carolina: I have just received through the hands of your Private Secretary, Mr. Telfair, your note of this date, in which you tender me the high and responsible position of United States Senator for the State of North Carolina, and I beg, in pursuance of your request, to indicate to you my acceptance. This position, so recently made vacant by death of the lamented Vance, comes to me, as you well know, unsought by me. It is your voluntary act, and I shall give to the high office my best endeavors to justify before the people of the State, to whom alone you are responsible, this action on your part. I beg that you will accept my sincere thanks for this evidence of your confidence and esteem. Yours, very truly, THOMAS J. JARVIS.

"Senator Jarvis was the recipient yesterday afternoon and last evening of many congratulations. He is very popular in Raleigh, and the impulse to congratulate him was general. Many clustered around him on the street, and last evening at the Yarboro, in the parlors and in the dining room, the new Senator received distinguished attention from both ladies and gentlemen.

An incident of the afternoon just before the appointment was made public was the calling upon the Governor of a delegation of well known colored men of Raleigh, who asked that ex-Gov. Jarvis be appointed, declaring that the colored people regarded him as their warm friend and wished him appointed. "In an interview regarding his policy Senator Jarvis said that he stands on the Chicago platform as constructed at the South. His relations with the administration may be inferred from the fact that he was United States Minister to Brazil under Mr. Cleveland's former administration. Mr. Jarvis had a letter from Senator Vance very recently asking him to come to Washington to see him, and had made preparations to go to Washington, when he received a telegram announcing his death, and he came on to Raleigh to meet his remains, accompanying them on to Asheville."

The new Senator Thomas J. Jarvis was born in Currituck county, N. C., in January, 1836, and is now 53 years old. He married, Dec. 23, 1874, Miss Mary Woodson, of Virginia. In the Confederate army he was Captain of Company B, 8th North Carolina regiment, and was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1865 from Currituck. He was elected a Democratic member of the Legislature from Tyrrell county in 1868. He was a member also of the succeeding Legislature, and was made speaker of the House. In 1874 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor on the ticket with Senator Vance, and became Governor in 1875 when Mr. Vance resigned to become Senator. At the next election he was chosen Governor, and altogether occupied the gubernatorial chair for more than six years. In year 1885 President Cleveland appointed Gov. Jarvis Minister to Brazil, where he passed the following four years with honor to himself and credit to the American people. Since his return he has devoted himself to his profession.

The Times feels jubilant and very much like self-congratulation, as it was the first paper in the field to urge Mr. Jarvis' claims for the appointments. Gov. Jarvis will leave this week for Washington to assume his Senatorial duties.

LAI D TO REST.

Senator Vance's Remains Entombed.

Solemn Services at Asheville.

An Immense Concurrence of People Attend the Burial.

An Asheville dispatch to the Wilmington Messenger, dated April 18, says: At the hour of noon today the remains of the late Senator Zebulon B. Vance were deposited in their last resting place, overlooking the beautiful Broad River. The funeral train arrived just after dawn from Raleigh, with the committees of both houses of Congress, the Governor and other officials of the State, with three cars of distinguished friends of the dead Senator.

Notwithstanding the late hour when the train passed Hickory, Morganton and other stations, large crowds passed into the funeral car to view the remains. The body was deposited in the First Presbyterian church at 8 o'clock, and from that time until 11:30 o'clock thousands of people from his native county of Buncombe passed to take a last look. An immense crowd of Confederates, followed by the different fraternal organizations, filed by.

Mrs. Vance spent half an hour in private with her dead husband, and asked that she might be the last one to see his face.

The procession was then formed, reaching almost from the church to the cemetery, a distance of two miles. The crowd that marched out to lay him away is estimated at 10,000.

The crowds that thronged the stations on the way to Asheville delayed the train by their urgent demands to see at least the casket, and they piled the funeral car with magnificent floral offerings. Each laurel added beautiful flowers marked "From the Ladies to Our Zeb," and when Asheville was finally reached, and the funeral car was opened for the last time, it required the aid of a company of militia to remove the floral tributes. The Asheville Light Infantry escorted the remains from the train to the church, and mounted guard over them, while the reverent crowds passed to take a last look at the beloved familiar face. The scene was very touching when the Confederate veterans took leave of their old commander. After these came several of the Senator's old slaves.

The procession to the cemetery was formed in the following order: Mount of police Asheville Light Infantry, Bingham Calets, pall-bearers in carriages, special escort of Rough and Ready Guards surrounding the hearse of the family of the deceased, Governor and staff, city and county officers, Masonic Order, Survivors' Association, Grand Army of the Republic, Old Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Royal Arcanum and Knights of Honor. These were followed by different labor organizations and the entire fire department. The procession, both civic and military, numbered about 10,000, while thousands looked on as spectators.

The streets through which the procession passed were draped in mourning, and from the front of the county court house hung a large portrait of the dead Senator, while stretching from the belfry on both sides to the ground were cords from which waved the marine signals which spelled, "We mourn for Zebulon Vance."

The ceremony at the grave was exceedingly solemn, and was conducted by Rev. Dr. Campbell, of the First Presbyterian church, after which the floral offerings were gracefully placed, and this North Carolina buried a son, whose place may be partly filled in the council halls of the nation, but never in the hearts of her people. It is understood to-night that ex-Governor Jarvis will be formally offered the appointment, but his acceptance is doubtful, he being too near Senator Ransom.

Affecting Scene. A special dispatch to the Messenger says an affecting scene in connection with the Vance ceremonies was told today by the post-mortem officials. For eighteen years Andy Winecoff has been in prison. He was convicted of murder eighteen years ago, in Robeson county, but Senator Vance procured a commutation of his sentence to life imprisonment. Winecoff always had a deep and abiding love for his benefactor. He is now an old man, employed at the prison office. Yesterday he begged to be allowed to look once more upon Vance's face. His request was granted, ed, and a couple of officers took him in a buggy to the Capitol, where he viewed the beloved face for the last time. He was almost overcome, and no man in all the great throng shed more genuine tears of sorrow.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.) With an unexpected disregard for the quips and jeers of those who protest against following the example of Thomas D. Reed, when he was Speaker of the House, the dominant party has at last resolved that quorum-counting shall be indulged in whenever such arithmetic is necessary. The Democrats of the House of Representatives are subjects for congratulation on their arrival at such a conclusion, for the entire weight of logic and common sense is opposed to the contention that a member can at the same time be present for obstructive purposes, and absent as a legislator. When it was first suggested that the 534 Congress would do wisely if it adopted in general the rules and methods of the 51st, there was practical unanimity of Democratic dissent, but every day's experience was testimony to the reasonable character of the suggestion. The Democratic quorum counter differs somewhat from the rule which worked so successfully in the 51st Congress, in that the counting will be done by some other member or officer than the Speaker; but this is merely a distinction without a difference, and will be useful only because it may reconcile some of those who are stubbornly opposed to any thing that savors of what has been termed "Caesarism." Yet the matter is regarded as somewhat of a personal victory for Reed, and Democrats have joined in good-natured congratulations. Bourke Cockran remarking that Mr Reed was no longer the original and only Czar, as the Democrats had decided to be czars. The importance of the remedy is, however, above partisanship. The people of the United States desire that the House of Representatives, being elected to legislate, shall be able to do the business for which it is chosen; and shall not be confined by a few obstructionists to a pitiful exhibition of "How not to do it."

Although the speech of Senator Hill against the income tax was the pyrotechnic feature of the tariff debate, Mr. Peffer, by virtue of his persistence and lung power, has earned the first place so far in the discussion. He is now regarded by his colleagues as a sort of legislative hydra, for every time he is interrupted or checked by the fight of time, he replenishes his stock before the next instalment is due, so that in a certain sense he is almost inexhaustible. The Peffer speech in one fell swoop would have been too aliphatic a dose for the delicate constitution of the Senate to stand at once, and Mr. Peffer knew in advance that he must dilute himself.

The advent of Coxey and his army is sufficiently near for prudent men to take cognizance of the fact that a disturbance may occur. The Capitol grounds are under the direct control of the congressional committees on Rules, and it is known that the members of the House and Senate committees have been quietly discussing the situation, for force is present to maintain the dignity of the statutes of the United States, Section 6 of the present law says "it is forbidden to parade, stand, or move in processions in the Capitol grounds, or display any flag, banner, or device designed to bring into public notice any party, organization, or movement." Quietly, out with the firm determination of enforcing this law, the two committees on rules have gone to work, and Mr. Coxey will be the recipient of a surprise if he attempts to carry out his programme.

The "Silver-tongued" Breckinridge takes the verdict against him in the infamous case that has polluted the columns of the press of the whole country for several weeks, very calmly. His debonair indifference may be assumed, but it is very pronounced. When he left the court room, immediately after the verdict, he was met by Mrs. Breckinridge, who was in waiting and husband and wife entered an open carriage and were driven along F street, one of the principal business streets in Washington, where department clerks and shoppers were eagerly buying papers containing the verdict. The carriage stopped at a big store, where Mrs. Breckinridge gave some orders. Col. Breckinridge stood in the doorway, calmly surveying the crowds of passers-by. A new-boy yelling "Here's yer extra! All about the Breckinridge trial!" pushed an extra in his face. He smiled, bought the paper, and re-entering the carriage with his wife, drove to their home.
