Attitude of European Papers.

The London Standard says that Emperor. William's message is a strikingly unfriendly act. It raises the presumption that he wishes to either challenge or destroy Britis 1 suzerainty in the Transvaal. Great Britain cannot and will not tolerate the slightest interference between the Transvaal and herself. The paper dilates upon German hostility to Great Britain everywhere.

The London Chronicle says: "The Emperor's message comes near being an offer of armed assistance." The London Times says: "The Emperor's message is of very grave import. All the available evidence shows that he intended to give unqualified recognition to the Transvaal as an inde-pendent State." The London Morning Post draws the deduction from Emperor William's telegram that His Majesty considers a war with Great Britain within the limits of possibility, and that he has settled the preliminaries with a view thereto. The Post advises Great Britain to concentrate a fleet by recalling the Mediterranean squadron now in the Levant to join the Channel squadron.

The Paris press are jubilant over the defeat of Dr. Jameson and his followers by the Boers near Johannesburg. The Rappel says that Germany, France and Russia are in accord, and asks what England will do in the circumstances. "Having the United States already on her hands." the paper nsks, "will she dare to dely the mill-tary Powers of Europe?" The Lanterne says: "Great Britain's contention that foreign Powers have no right to intervene in due on merchandise sold on credit in that the Transvaal is neither more nor less than and simple, to her own advantage."

Ex-Speaker Crisp says that in the light of the London Chronicle's dispatches he does not see how England can insist on her claim to the disputed territory on the Veneznelan frontier.
